Editorial Address.

Rivington, the King's printer, it is known, was a terrible tory during the Revolutionary War, and was always assailing the rebels. Ethan Allen, the dare devil of Vermont, determined to give him a licking; and some reminiscences in the New York Express, show the clever manner in which Rivington got rid of the unpleasant affair :

He had been bold in his misrepresentations of the "Rebels," and so personal in his remarks that although he had assurances from Governor Clinton of safety for his person and property, yet there were some expected visitors that he did not wish to see. The foremost of these was Ethan Allen. Rivington was a fine portly looking man, and wore powder. At last Allen appeared. His clerk who first saw him, well knew his master's horror for Allen. Rivington afterwards gave to Mr. Dunlap the following account of the meeting:—"I was sitting after a good dinner, alone with my bottle of Madeira before me, when I heard an unusual noise in the street, and a huzza from the boys. I was in the 2d story, and on stepping to the window, saw a tall figure in tarnished regimentals, with a large cocked hat and an enormously long sword, followed by a crowd of boys, who occasionally cheered him with huzzas, of which he seemed insensible. He came up to my door and stopped.—I could see no more—my heart told me it was Ethan Allen. I shut down my window, and retired behind my table and bottle. I was certain the hour of reckoning was come. There was no retreat. Mr. Staples, my clerk, came in paler than ever, and clasping his hands, said, 'Master, he has come. I know it. He entered the store and asked if James Rivington lived here. I answered, yes, sir.' 'Is he at home?' 'I will go and see, sir,' I said; and now master what is to be done?—There he is, sir, in the store, and the boys peeping at him from the street.' I had made up my mind—I looked at the Madeira—possibly took a glass. Show him up, said I,—and I thought if such Madeira cannot mollify him, he must be harder than adamant. There was a fearful moment of suspense. I listened—I heard him on the stairs, and heard his long sword clanking on every step. In he stalked. 'Is your name James Rivington?' It is, sir, and no man could be more happy to see general Ethan Allen—take a chair, sir; by the table; and afterwards a glass of this Madeira. He sat down and began—‘sir, I come’ Not a word, general, till you take a glass, and I filled—ten year old, on my own keeping—another glass, sir, and then we will talk of old affairs. Sir, we finished two bottles, and parted as good friends as if nothing had ever happened to make us otherwise.

The Grave of Ethan Allen.

[From the Lewiston (Me.) Journal.]

To-day I have paid a visit to the grave of Ethan Allen, in Burlington, Vt. The cemetery in which his remains lie is nearly a mile from the lake, but the situation is beautiful. The inclosure is shaded by a large number of evergreens, and ornamented in that tasteful and impressive manner with which mourning friends love to decorate the resting-places of those who have gone before them. The words over the gateway disclose the trustful spirit with which the Christian has entered the confines of eternity.

“I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord.”

As I stood over the grave of Allen, I could but wonder at the narrow space which confined a spirit, once so uneasy, brave and unconquerable. Yes! here mouldered the remains of him who, in the gloomy morning of our revolutionary struggle, collected from the country around a few choice spirits and hastened to Ticonderoga to summon the British commander, “in the name of Jehovah and the Continental Congress,” to surrender. When liberty found such defenders, victory was certain.

A plain marble slab is placed horizontally over the grave; but the zeal of pilgrims to this hallowed spot has broken and removed as relics nearly one-half of the stone. A portion of the inscription is wanting, but what remains runs thus:

“ GEN. ETHAN ALLEN
RESTS BENEATH THIS STONE.

The 12th day of Feb., 1789.

Aged 50 years.

His spirit tried the mercies of his God,
In whom he believed and strongly trusted.”

MONUMENT AND STATUE TO ETHAN ALLEN.

It was intended to have the monument to Ethan Allen completed before winter; but unexpected hindrances have delayed the work and it will not be finished till next season. But besides the monument provided for by legislative enactment, the purpose now is to have a characteristic colossal statue, probably of granite, and executed by an artist of genius, placed on the top of the column. Leave was obtained of the Legislature to have this token of individual respect for the memory of the hero surmount the public memorial of the State. The cost of such a statue will be $2,000, and a subscription is now in most successful progress under the authority of the committee, John N. Pomeroy and Charles Adams, Esquires, to raise the means. Mr. Warren Root, of this place, for the present has it in charge. The subscriptions are limited to one dollar from each individual, (save that heads of families are allowed to give at that rate for the members of their families,) so that no one need be hindered from joining in a work so grateful to the feelings of Vermonters. To save time and expense, all subscriptions are paid as they are subscribed. As soon as the amount is raised (and that could be done in a week if persons enough could be called upon in that time), the committee will place the execution of the statue in progress, so that when the monumental column is raised the statue can be elevated to its place also—thus avoiding further delay and a heavy additional expense.—Burlington, Vt., Free Press, Dec. 4.

IN announcing the publication of this little, simple, true, and unvarnished NARRATIVE, the publishers have complied with the wishes of a number of persons, who had a desire to keep in remembrance the hero of Ticonderoga, and the exploits he performed. It is believed that there is not a copy for sale in any bookstore in the United States; and the style of printing, at the time of its first appearance, which is now near thirty years since, was in so unimproved a condition, that it has never been seen but in the shabby dress of a large and ragged pamphlet. The events of those "troublous times," in which Col. ALLEN took a conspicuous part, are rendered doubly interesting from the lively, unadorned manner of his own narration. The high compliments which he pays to the prowess, uniform perseverance and resolution, manifested by the "Green Mountain Boys" of his native State, will no doubt be an inducement to them, and to his countrymen generally, to read and preserve this monument of him, and as they con the pages of this "little book" which he has "left them," to imitate the coolness and courage of the deceased veteran.

THE sufferings and cruelties borne by him and his fellow soldiers, frequently draw from him in the course of his NARRATIVE, a language the most severe, with respect to a country from whom we originated, with whom we are now at peace, and with whom it is our policy to continue on a friendly footing; but the candid and the feeling mind should make great allowance for the unparalleled situation of our affairs, for the sufferings of his handful of little "Spartans," for whom he felt a father's and a brother's affection. These circumstances must have given a deep colouring to the pencil which was portraying his own and his country's wrongs. On the whole, we think this little tract may be re-perused, with advantage and pleasure, by the aged, and read with much edification and entertainment by the young. As it is deemed that the very words, in every respect, made use of by the Colonel, would be more acceptable to the reader, than any artificial decoration of style, we shall almost invariably adhere to the original.

THE work is rendered interesting also by a considerable number of original, explanatory and occasional notes.

INTRODUCTION.

INDUCED by a sense of duty to my country, and by the application of many of my worthy friends, some of whom are of the first characters, I have concluded to publish the following narrative of the extraordinary scenes of my captivity, and the discoveries which I made in the course of the same, of the cruel and relentless disposition and behavior of the enemy, towards the prisoners in their power ; from which the state politician, and every gradation of character among the people, to the worthy tiller of the soil, may deduce such inferences as they shall think proper to carry into practice. Some men are appointed into office, in these States, who read the history of the cruelties of this war, with the same careless indifference, as they do the pages of the Roman history ; nay, some are preferred to places of trust and profit by the tory influence. The instances are (I hope) but rare, and it stands all freemen in hand, to prevent their farther influence, which, of all other things, would be the most baneful to the liberties and happiness of this country ; and, so far as such influence takes place, rob us of the victory we have obtained at the expense of so much blood and treasure.*

* The amor patriæ, which no lover of his country perhaps possessed in a superior degree to the writer of this Narrative, carries the Colonel in this instance, and in some others, which the reader will witness in the course of his perusal, a little too far. There have, no doubt, been traitors among us to the American cause ; but the word tory is of so indefinite a signification that it would seem it might be laid aside with propriety, and one, of more definite import, substituted. Were the colonel

I should have exhibited to the public a history of the facts herein contained, soon after my exchange, had not the urgency of my private affairs, together with more urgent public business, demanded my attention, till a few weeks before the date hereof. The reader will readily discern, that a narrative of this sort could not have been written when I was a prisoner: My trunk and writings were often searched under various pretences; so that I never wrote a syllable, or made even a rough minute whereon I might predicate this narration, but trusted solely to my memory for the whole. I have, however, taken the greatest care and pains to recollect the facts and arrange them: but as they touch a variety of characters and opposite interests, I am sensible that all will not be pleased with the relation of them: Be this as it will, I have made truth my invariable* now living, and moved by the same spirit of patriotism he once was, his ire would probably be directed generally against the enemies of America, unprincipled foreigners, and the desperate fugitives from justice, with whom our large seaports are infested.

* This concession of the colonel ought not, however, to derogate from the accuracy of this account. The regular journalist, it is allowed, can lay claim to considerable correctness in point of date and place, but the interesting occurrences of the moment are better fixed in the memory without the use of pen. The mind, which is accustomed to have its operations put on paper as they make their transit over it, soon loses their impression, under the consideration that it can always command them again, by a recurrence to their record on paper. It has been thought by some, though the remark may be irrelevant here, that the memory is gradually affected, and perhaps injured by a too close attention to minute downsmall, uninteresting facts.

guide, and stake my honor on the truth of the facts. I have been very generous with the British in giving them full and ample credit for all their good usage, of any considerable consequence, which I met with among them, during my captivity; which was easily done, as I met with but little, in comparison of the bad, which, by reason of the great plurality of it, could not be contained in so concise a narrative; so that I am certain that I have more fully enumerated the favours which I received, than the abuses I suffered. The critic will be pleased to excuse any inaccuracies in the performance itself, as the author has unfortunately missed of a liberal education.*

ETHAN ALLEN.

BENNINGTON, March 25, 1779.

* The colonel, we presume, would wish to have appeared, and actually to have been the unprejudiced historian of the times and facts of which he was treating. And, considering the ferment of the times, and warmth of his character, of the ardour of his friendships, and his enmities, we may wonder that he has not been more severe in his strictures on British treatment than he has. But justice to a nation with whom we are on friendly terms, and whose government generally, except where its edicts have been abused by executive officers, is conducted on the firmest basis of justice, and the rights of man, requires that the reader should soften, in his mind, the asperity of some of the veteran's observations.

Col. Ethan Allen's
CAPTIVITY, &c.

EVER since I arrived to a state of manhood, and acquainted myself with the general history of mankind, I have felt a sincere passion for liberty.* The history of nations,

* There is something peculiarly fascinating, to the mind of youth, in the word liberty. It is then

“When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns Brisk as the April buds in primrose season,” that the goddess appears decorated in her most enchanting drapery. The horrors of tyranny then assume the most forbidding garb, and the heart pants eripere sceptrum tyrannis, and to give freedom to “oppressed humanity.” It is then that tales of “knights and barons bold,” the foes of oppression, catch the notice of youth, doomed to perpetual slavery, in consequence of yielding up to tyrants their natural-born liberties, I read with a sort of philosophical horror;* so that the first systematical and and give it a correspondent ardour. As the juvenile heyday retreats, a more rational, but less enthusiastic view is taken of the subject. The same love of liberty remains, but it rests on a surer basis, on the pedestal of reason. This is the chaste dame that Goldsmith in his TRAVELLER alludes to, in the following extract,

“ And thou, fair Freedom, taught alike to feel
The rabble's rage, and tyrant's angry steel ;
Thou transitory flower, alike undone
By proud Contempt, or Favour's fost'ring sun ;
Still may thy blooms the changeful elime endure,
I only would repress them to secure ;
For just experience tells, in every soil,
That those who think must govern those who toil ;
And all that Freedom's highest aims can reach,
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.
Hence, should one order disproportion'd grow,
Its double weight must ruin all below.”

* It is in the recollection of most of us, how popular, at its commencement, was the revolution in France. Americans, who were then just beginning to enjoy the blessings of “ self-government,” could feel for those who were deprived of them. They made the cause their own. We have seen in what their professions of liberty and equality have terminated. Setting aside the views of a few ambitious leaders, the love of liberty was as sincere among the great body of Frenchmen, as it was, perhaps, among our own countrymen. But that intelligence and information, which are diffused in this country, were not to be found in France. The soil, it is bloody attempt, at Lexington, to enslave America, thoroughly electrified my mind, and fully determined me to take part with my country : And, while I was wishing for an opportunity to signalize myself in its behalf, directions were privately sent to me from the then colony (now state) of Connecticut, to raise the Green Mountain Boys, and, if possible, with them to surprise and take the fortress, Ticonderoga.* This enterprise I presumed, was therefore unfavorable to the cause of Freedom, and invited the empty claims, and usurpation of a despot. No doubt, Col. Allen would have viewed, with more than "philosophical horror," the late assumption of the throne of the Bourbons, by Bonaparte, when comparing it with the professions of liberty with which it was accomplished.

* This fortress is thus described in the edition of the American Gazetteer, by Drs. Morse and Parish :

"Ticonderoga, in the state of N. York, was built by the French in the year 1756, on the north side of a peninsula, formed by the confluence of the waters issuing from Lake George into Lake Champlain. It is now a heap of ruins, and forms an appendage to a farm. Its name signifies Noisy, in the Indian language, and was called by the French, Corillon. Mount Independence, in Addison co. Vermont, is about two miles S. E. of it, and separated from it by the narrow strait which conveys the waters of Lake George and South river into Lake Champlain. It had all the advantages that art or nature could give it, being defended on three sides by water surrounded by cheerfully undertook ; and, after first guarding all the several passes that led thither, to cut off all intelligence between the garrison and the country, made a forced march from Bennington, and arrived at the lake opposite to Ticonderoga, on the evening of the ninth day of May, 1775, with two hundred and thirty valiant Green Mountain Boys ; and it was with the utmost difficulty that I procured boats to cross the lake. However, I landed eighty three men near the garrison, and sent the boats back for the rear guard, commanded by Col. Seth Warner ; but the day began to dawn, and I found myself under a necessity to attack the fort, before the rear could cross the lake ; and, as it was viewed hazardous, I harrangued the officers and soldiers in the manner following : “ Friends and fellow, rocks, and where that fails, the French erected a breast-work nine feet high. This was the first fortress attacked by the Americans during the revolutionary war. The troops under Gen. Abercrombie were defeated here in the year 1758, but it was taken the year following by Gen. Amherst. It was surprised by Cols. Allen and Arnold, May 10, 1775, and was retaken by Gen. Burgoyne, in July, 1777.

soldiers, You have, for a number of years past, been a scourge and terror to arbitrary power. Your valor has been famed abroad, and acknowledged, as appears by the advice and orders to me, from the General Assembly of Connecticut, to surprise and take the garrison now before us. I now propose to advance before you, and, in person, conduct you through the wicket-gate ; for we must this morning either quit our pretensions to valor, or possess ourselves of this fortress in a few minutes ; and, inasmuch as it is a desperate attempt, which none but the bravest of men dare undertake, I do not urge it on any contrary to his will. You that will undertake voluntarily, poise your firelocks.*

* This address, in its simple and artless clothing, affects one as much, nay, more than the studied harangues of crowned conquerors. It finds its way immediately to the heart, and we anxiously look for the issue. Thus it was that the hero of Thermopylæ addressed his little band, though far different the event of the two enterprises ; and not unlike to it was the conclusion of Hannibal's address to the Carthaginians, on their march to the Roman capital ; " But for you, there is no middle fortune between death and victory. Let this be but well fixed in your minds, and once again I say you are conquerors."

The men being, at this time, drawn up in three ranks, each poised his firelock. I ordered them to face to the right; and, at the head of the centre-file, marched them immediately to the wicket gate aforesaid, where I found a sentry posted, who instantly snapped his fusee at me: I ran immediately towards him, and he retreated through the covered way into the parade within the garrison, gave a halloo, and ran under a bomb-proof. My party, who followed me into the fort, I formed on the parade in such manner as to face the two barracks which faced each other. The garrison being asleep, except the sentries, we gave three huzzas which greatly surprised them. One of the sentries made a pass at one of my officers with a charged bayonet, and slightly wounded him: My first thought was to kill him with my sword; but, in an instant, I altered the design and fury of the blow to a slight cut on the side of the head; upon which he dropped his gun, and asked quarter, which I readily granted him,*

* Here is a striking instance of the bravery of the and demanded of him the place where the commanding officer kept; he shewed me a pair of stairs in the front of a barrack, on the west part of the garrison, which led up to a second story in said barrack, to which I immediately repaired, and ordered the commander, Capt. Delaplace, to come forth instantly, or I would sacrifice the whole garrison; at which the Capt. came immediately to the door, with his breeches in his hand; when I ordered him to deliver to me the fort instantly; he asked me by what authority I demanded it: I answered him, "In the name of the great Jehovah, and the Continental Congress." The authority of the Congress being very little known at that time,* he began to speak again; but I interrupted him, and, with my drawn sword over his soldier, united with the humanity of the man; in a situation when the destruction of one individual of the enemy, might be deemed of signal consequence in ensuring success to the enterprize.

* If the colonel had expressed a little of his usual severity in this place, he might have remarked also, that neither of the authorities he had mentioned were much known in a British camp.

head, again demanded an immediate surrender of the garrison ; with which he then complied, and ordered his men to be forthwith paraded without arms, as he had given up the garrison : In the mean time some of my officers had given orders, and, in consequence thereof, sundry of the barrack doors were beat down, and about one third of the garrison imprisoned, which consisted of the said commander, a Lieut. Feltham, a conductor of artillery, a gunner, two serjeants, and forty four rank and file ; about one hundred pieces of cannon, one thirteen inch mortar, and a number of swivels. This surprise was carried into execution in the gray of the morning of the tenth day of May, 1775. The sun seemed to rise that morning with a superior lustre ; and Ticonderoga and its dependencies smiled on its conquerors, who tossed about the flowing bowl, and wished success to Congress, and the liberty and freedom of America. Happy it was for me, at that time, that the then future pages of the book of fate, which afterwards unfolded a miserable scene of two years and eight months imprisonment, were hid from my view. But to return to my narration: Col. Warner, with the rear guard, crossed the lake, and joined me early in the morning, whom I sent off, without loss of time, with about one hundred men, to take possession of Crown Point, which was garrisoned with a serjeant and twelve men; which he took possession of the same day, as also of upwards of one hundred pieces of cannon. But one thing now remained to be done, to make ourselves complete masters of lake Champlain; this was to possess ourselves of a sloop of war, which was then lying at St. John's; to effect which, it was agreed in a council of war, to arm and man out a certain schooner, which lay at South Bay, and that Capt. (now general) Arnold* should command her, and that I should

Arnold was once a brave officer, persevering, indefatigable and ready to undertake the most daring enterprises. command the batteaux. The necessary preparations being made, we set sail from Ticonderoga, in quest of the sloop, which was much larger, and carried more guns and heavier metal than the schooner. General Arnold, with the schooner sailing faster than the batteaux, arrived at St. John's ; and, by surprise, possessed himself of the sloop, before I could arrive with the batteaux : He also made prisoners of a sergeant and twelve men, who were garrisoned at that place. It is worthy remark that, as soon as General Arnold had secured the prisoners on board, and had made preparation for sailing, the wind, which but a few hours before was fresh in the south, and well served to carry us to St. John's, now shifted, and came fresh from the north ; and, in about one hour's time, Gen. Arnold sailed

It commenced in June 1778, and ended in Jan. 1779, when he was sentenced to be reprimanded. with the prize and schooner for Ticonderoga.* When I met him with my party, within a few miles of St. John's, he saluted me with a discharge of cannon, which I returned with a volley of small arms : This being repeated three times, I went on board the sloop with my party, where several loyal Congress healths were drank. We were now masters of lake Champlain, and the garrison depending thereon. This success I viewed of consequence in the scale of American politics ; for, if a settlement, between the then colonies and Great-Britain, had soon taken place, it would have been easy to have restored these acquisitions ; but viewing the then future consequences of a cruel war, as it has really proved to be, and the command of that lake, garrisons, artillery, &c. it must be viewed to be of signal importance to the American cause, and it is marvellous to me, that we ever lost the command of it. Nothing but taking a Burgoyne, with a whole British army, could, in my opinion, atone for it ; and, notwithstanding such an extraordinary victory, we must be obliged to regain the command of that lake again, be the cost what it will : By doing this, Canada will easily be brought into union and confederacy with the United States of America. Such an event would put it out of the power of the western tribes of Indians to carry on a war with us, and be a solid and durable bar against any farther inhuman barbarities committed on our frontier inhabitants, by cruel and blood-thirsty savages ; for it is impossible for them to carry on a war, except they are supported by the trade and commerce of some civilized nation ; which to them would be impracticable, did Canada compose a part of the American empire.*

Early in the fall of the year, the little army, under the command of the Generals Schuyler and Montgomery, were ordered to advance into Canada. I was at Ticonderoga, when this order arrived; and the Generals, with most of the field officers, requested me to attend them in the expedition; and, though at that time I had no commission from Congress, yet they engaged me, that I should be considered as an officer, the same as though I had a commission; and should, as occasion might require, command certain detachments of the army—This I considered as an honorable offer, and did not hesitate to comply with it, and advanced with the army to the isle Aux Noix;* from whence I was ordered, by the general, to go in company with Major Brown, and certain interpreters, through the woods into Canada, with letters to the Canadians, and to let them know, that the design of the army was only against the English garrisons, and not the country, their liberties, or religion: and having, through much danger, negociated this business, I returned to the isle Aux Noix the fore part of September, when Gen. Schuyler returned to Albany; and in consequence the command devolved upon general Montgomery, whom I assisted in laying a line of circumvallation round the fortress, St. John's.* After which I was ordered, by the general, to make a second tour into Canada, upon nearly the same design as before; and withal to observe the disposition, designs and movements of the inhabitants of the country. This reconnoitre I undertook with reluctance, choosing rather to assist at the siege of St. John's, which was then closely invested; but my esteem for the general's person, and opinion of him as a politician and brave officer, induced me to proceed.

* St. John's, a town and fort in Lower Canada, on the west bank of Sorrel river, at the north end of lake Champlain, twenty eight miles southward of Montreal. It has been established as the sole port of entry and clearance for all goods imported from the interior of the United States into Canada, by an ordinance published by the executive council of Lower Canada, the 7th of July, 1796. It was taken by General Montgomery, in Nov. 1775. North lat. 45, 9. west long. 72, 18.

I passed through all the parishes on the river Sorrel,* to a parish at the mouth of the same, which is called by the same name, preaching politics ;† and went from thence across the Sorrel to the river St. Lawrence, and up the river through the parishes to Longueuil, and so far met with good success as an itinerant. In this round, my guard were Canadians, my interpreter, and some few attendants excepted. On the morning of the 24th day of September, I set out with my guard of about eighty men, from Longueuil, to go to La Prairie ;‡ from whence I deter-

† By politics, it is presumed, the author means eulogising the government, under which he lived ; praising its institutions, the salutary and mild operation of its laws, and the degree of liberty enjoyed by the poorest of his fellow citizens. mined to go to Gen. Montgomery's camp; but had not advanced two miles before I met with Major Brown, who has since been advanced to the rank of a Colonel, who desired me to halt, saying that he had something of importance to communicate to me and my confidants; upon which I halted the party, and went into an house, and took a private room with him and several of my associates, where Col. Brown proposed that, "Provided I would return to Longueuil, and procure some canoes, so as to cross the river St. Lawrence a little north of Montreal, he would cross it a little to the south of the town, with near two hundred men, as he had boats sufficient; and that we would make ourselves masters of Montreal."—This plan was readily approved by me and those in council; and in consequence of which I returned to Longueuil, collected a few canoes, and added about thirty English Americans to my party, and crossed the river in the night of the 24th, agreeable to the before proposed plan. My whole party, at this time, consisted of about one hundred and ten men, near eighty of whom were Canadians. We were the most of the night crossing the river, as we had so few canoes that they had to pass and re-pass three times, to carry my party across. Soon after day-break, I set a guard between me and the town, with special orders to let no person whatever pass or re-pass them, and another guard on the other end of the road, with like directions; in the mean time, I reconnoitered the best ground to make a defence, expecting Col. Brown's party was landed on the other side of the town, he having, the day before, agreed to give three huzzas with his men early in the morning, which signal I was to return, that we might each know that both parties were landed; but the sun, by this time, being near two hours high, and the sign failing, I began to conclude myself to be in a premunire, and would have crossed the river back again, but I knew the enemy would have discovered such an attempt; and, as there could not more than one third part of my troops cross at one time, the other two thirds would of course fall into their hands. This I could not reconcile to my own feelings as a man, much less as an officer : I therefore concluded to maintain the ground, if possible, and all to fare alike. In consequence of this resolution, I dispatched two messengers, one to La Prairie, to Col. Brown, and the other to L'Assomption, a French settlement, to Mr. Walker, who was in our interest, requesting their speedy assistance, giving them, at the same time, to understand my critical situation : In the mean time, sundry persons came to my guards, pretending to be friends, but were by them taken prisoners and brought to me.— These I ordered to confinement,* 'till their friendship could be farther confirmed ; for I was jealous they were spies, as they proved to be afterwards : One of the principal of them making his escape, exposed the weakness of my party, which was the final cause of my misfortune ; for I have been since informed that Mr. Walker, agreeable to my desire, exerted himself, and had raised a considerable number of men for my assistance, which brought him into difficulty afterwards ; but, upon hearing of my misfortune, he disbanded them again.

The town of Montreal was in a great tumult. Gen. Carlton and the royal party, made every preparation to go on board their vessels of force, as I was afterwards informed, but the spy, escaping from my guard to the town, occasioned an alteration in their policy, and emboldened Gen. Carlton to send the force, which he had there collected, out against me. I had previously chosen my ground, but when I saw the number of the enemy, as they sallied out of the town, I perceived it would be a day of trouble, if not of rebuke ; but I had no chance to flee, as Montreal was situated on an island, and the river St. Lawrence cut off my communication to Gen. Montgomery's camp. I encouraged my soldiery to bravely defend themselves, that we should soon have help, and that we should be able to keep the ground, if no more. This, and much more, I affirmed with the greatest seeming assurance, and which in reality I thought to be in some degree probable.

The enemy consisted of not more than forty regular troops, together with a mixed multitude, chiefly Canadians, with a number of English who lived in the town, and some Indians ; in all, to the number of near five hundred.

The reader will notice that most of my party were Canadians ; indeed it was a motley parcel of soldiery which composed both parties. However, the enemy began the attack from wood-piles, ditches, buildings, and such like places, at a considerable distance, and I returned the fire from a situation more than equally advantageous. The attack began between two and three of the clock in the afternoon, just before which I ordered a volunteer, by the name of Richard Young,* with a detachment of nine men as a flank guard, which, under the cover of the bank of the river, could not only annoy the enemy, but at the same time, serve as a flank guard to the left of the main body.

* The names of these subordinate traitors should be

The fire continued for some time on both sides ; and I was confident that such a remote method of attack could not carry the ground, provided it should be continued 'till night : But near half the body of the enemy began to flank round to my right ; upon which I ordered a volunteer, by the name of John Dugan, who had lived many years in Canada, and understood the French language, to detach about fifty of the Canadians, and post himself at an advantageous ditch, which was on my right, to prevent my being surrounded : He advanced with the detachment, but, instead of occupying the post, made his escape, as did likewise Mr. Young upon the left, with their detachments. I soon perceived that the enemy was in possession of the ground, which Dugan should have occupied. At this time I had but about forty five men with me ; some of whom were wounded ; the enemy kept closing round me, nor was it in my power to prevent it ; by which means, my situation, which was advantageous in the first part of the attack, ceased to be so in the last ; and, being almost entirely surrounded with such vast unequal numbers, I ordered a retreat, but found that those of the enemy, who were of the country, and their Indians, could run as fast as my men, though the regulars could not. Thus I retreated near a mile, and some of the enemy, with the savages, kept flanking me, and others crowded hard in the rear. In fine, I expected, in a very short time, to try the world of spirits : for I was apprehensive that no quarter would be given to me, and therefore had determined to sell my life as dear as I could. One of the enemy's officers, boldly pressing in the rear, discharged his fussee at me ; the ball whistled near me, as did many others that day. I returned the salute, and missed him, as running had put us both out of breath ; for I conclude we were not fright-

ed* : I then saluted him with my tongue in a harsh manner, and told him that, inasmuch as his numbers were so far superior to mine, I would surrender, provided I could be treated with honor, and be assured of good quarter for myself and the men who were with me ; and he answered I should ; another officer, coming up directly after, confirmed the treaty ; upon which I agreed to surrender with my party, which then consisted of thirty-one effective men, and seven wounded. I ordered them to ground their arms, which they did.

The officer I capitulated with, then directed me and my party to advance towards him, which was done ; I handed him my sword, and in half a minute after, a savage, part of whose head was shaved, being almost naked and painted, with feathers intermixed with the hair of the other side of his head, came running to me with an incredible swiftness ; he seemed to advance with more than mortal speed ; as he approached near me, his hellish visage was beyond all description ; snakes' eyes appear innocent in comparison of his ; his features extorted ;* malice, death, murder, and the wrath of devils and damned spirits are the emblems of his countenance ; and, in less than twelve feet of me, presented his firelock ; at the instant of his present, I twitched the officer, to whom I gave my sword, between me and the savage ; but he flew round with great fury, trying to single me out to shoot me without killing the officer ; but by this time I was near as nimble as he, keeping the officer in such a position that his danger was my defence ; but, in less than half a minute, I was attacked by just such another imp of hell : Then I made the officer fly around with incredible velocity, for a few seconds of time, when I perceived a Canadian, who had lost one eye, as appeared afterwards, taking my part against the savages ; and in an instant an Irishman came to my assistance with a fixed bayonet, and drove away the fiends, swearing by Jusus he would kill them. This tragic scene composed my mind. The escaping from so awful a death, made even imprisonment happy ; the more so as my conquerors on the field treated me with great civility and politeness.

The regular officers said that they were very happy to see Col. Allen: I answered them, that I should rather chose to have seen them at Gen. Montgomery's camp. The gentlemen replied, that they gave full credit to what I said, and, as I walked to the town, which was, as I should guess, more than two miles, a British officer walking at my right hand, and one of the French noblesse at my left ; the latter of which, in the action, had his eyebrow carried away by a glancing shot, but was nevertheless very merry and facetious, and no abuse was offered me 'till I came to the barrack-yard, at Montreal, where I met general Prescott, who asked me my name, which I told him : He then asked me, whether I was that Col. Allen, who took Ticonderoga. I told him I was the very man : Then he shook his cane over my head, calling many hard names, among which he frequently used the word rebel, and put himself in a great rage. I told him he would do well not to cane me, for I was not accustomed to it, and shook my fist at him, telling him that was the beetle of mortality for him, if he offered to strike ;* upon which Capt. M'Cloud of the British, pulled him by the skirt, and whispered to him, as he afterwards told me, to this import ; that it was inconsistent with his honor to strike a prisoner. He then ordered a sergeant's command with fixed bayonets to come forward, and kill thirteen Canadians, which were included in the treaty aforesaid.

It cut me to the heart to see the Canadians in so hard a case, in consequence of their having been true to me ; they were wringing their hands, saying their prayers, as I concluded, and expected immediate death. I therefore stepped between the executioners and the Canadians, opened my clothes, and told Gen. Prescott to thrust his bayonet into my breast, for I was the sole cause of the Canadians taking up arms.

The guard, in the mean time, rolling their eye-balls from the General to me, as though impatiently waiting his dread commands to sheath their bayonets in my heart; I could however plainly discern, that he was in a suspense and quandary about the matter: This gave me additional hopes of succeeding; for my design was not to die, but save the Canadians by a finesse. The general stood a minute, when he made me the following reply; "I will not execute you now; but you shall grace a halter at Tyburn, God damn you."*

* This harsh reply and resolve, it seems, had less of grace, than comfort to the hero. Language like this is said to be common in the field; but from one officer to another, when one is prisoner to the other, is indefensible. The real hero fights for victory, and not for the op-

I remember I disdained his mentioning such a place ; I was, notwithstanding, a little pleased with the expression,* as it significantly conveyed to me the idea of postponing the present appearance of death ; besides his sentence was by no means final, as to “gracing a halter, although I had anxiety about it after I landed in England, as the reader will find in the course of this history. Gen. Prescott then ordered one of his officers to take me on board the Gaspee schooner of war, and confine me, hands and feet, in irons, which was done the same afternoon I was taken.

The action continued an hour and three quarters, by the watch, and I know not to this day how many of my men were killed, though I am certain there were but few ! if I remember right, seven were wounded ; one of them, William Stewart, by name, was wounded by a savage with a tomahawk, after he was taken prisoner and disarmed, but was rescued by some of the generous enemy; and so far recovered of his wounds, that he afterwards went with the other prisoners to England.

Of the enemy were killed, a major Carden, who had been wounded in eleven different battles, and an eminent merchant, Patterson, of Montreal, and some others, but I never knew their whole loss, as their accounts were different. I am apprehensive that it is rare, that so much ammunition was expended, and so little execution done by it; though such of my party as stood the ground, behaved with great fortitude, much exceeding that of the enemy, but were not the best of marksmen, and, I am apprehensive, were all killed or taken; the wounded were all put into the hospital at Montreal, and those that were not, were put on board of different vessels in the river, and shackled together by pairs, viz. two men fastened together by one hand-cuff, being closely fixed to one wrist of each of them, and treated with the greatest severity, nay as criminals.

I now come to the description of the irons, which were put on me : The hand-cuff was of a common size, and form, but my leg irons, I should imagine, would weigh thirty pounds ; the bar was eight feet long, and very substantial ; the shackles, which encompassed my ancles, were very tight. I was told by the officer, who put them on, that it was the king's plate, and I heard other of their officers say, that it would weigh forty weight. The irons were so close upon my ancles, that I could not lie down in any other manner than on my back. I was put into the lowest and most wretched part of the vessel, where I got the favor of a chest to sit on ; the same answered for my bed at night ; and having procur'd some little blocks of the guard, who day and night, with fixed bayonets, watched over me, to lie under each end of the large bar of my leg irons, to preserve my ancles from galling, while I sat on the chest, or lay back on the same, though most of the time, night and day, I sat on it ; but at length, having a desire to lie down on my side, which the closeness of the irons forbid, I desired the captain to loosen them for that purpose ; but was denied the favor :* The Captain's name was Royal, who did not seem to be an ill-natured man ; but oftentimes said, that his express orders were to treat me with such severity, which was disagreeable to his own feelings ; nor did he ever insult me, though many others, who came on board, did. One of the officers, by the name of Bradley, was very generous to me ; he would often send me victuals from his own table ; nor did a day fail, but that he sent me a good drink of grog.†

The reader is now invited back to the time I was put into irons. I requested the privilege to write to Gen. Prescott, which was

* The reader will call to mind the merciless manacles and cruel trappings of Trenk. The colonel's sufferings however could not be compared, in point of severity, with those of the unhappy prisoner of Magdeburg.

† This little favour, though scarcely of more value than a "cup of water," has "met its reward" in the grateful mention which the hero makes of it in this NARRATIVE. granted. I reminded him of the kind and generous manner of my treatment of the prisoners I took at Ticonderoga; the injustice and ungentleman-like usage, which I had met with from him, and demanded gentleman-like usage, but received no answer from him. I soon after wrote to Gen. Carlton, which met the same success. In the mean while many of those who were permitted to see me, were very insulting.

I was confined in the manner I have related, on board the Gaspee schooner, about six weeks; during which time I was obliged to throw out plenty of extravagant language, which answered certain purposes, at that time, better than to grace a history.

To give an instance upon being insulted, in a fit of anger I twisted off a nail with my teeth, which I took to be a ten-penny nail; it went through the mortise of the bar of my hand-cuff, and at the same time I swaggered over those who abused me; particularly a Doctor Dace, who told me that I was outlawed by New-York, and deserved death for several years past; was at last fully ripen-ed for the halter, and in a fair way to obtain it : When I challenged him, he excused himself in consequence, as he said, of my being a criminal ; but I flung such a flood of language at him that it shocked him and the spectators, for my anger was very great. I heard one say, damn him, can he eat iron ? After that a small padlock was fixed to the handcuff, instead of the nail ; and as they were mean-spirited in their treatment to me, so it appeared to me, that they were equally timorous and cowardly.*

I was after sent with the prisoners taken with me to an armed vessel in the river, which lay off against Quebec, under the command of Capt. M'Cloud, of the British, who treated me in a very generous and obliging manner, and according to my rank ; in about twenty-four hours I bid him farewell with regret ; but my good fortune still continued ; The name of the Capt. of the vessel I was put on board, was Littlejohn ; who, with his officers, behaved in a polite, generous, and friendly manner. I lived with them in the cabin, and fared on the best, my irons being taken off, contrary to the order he had received from the commanding officer ; but Capt. Littlejohn swore, that a brave man should not be used as a rascal, on board his ship.

Thus I found myself in possession of happiness once more, and the evils, I had lately suffered, gave me an uncommon relish for it.

Capt. Littlejohn used to go to Quebec almost every day, in order to pay his respects to certain gentlemen and ladies ; being there on a certain day, he happened to meet with some disagreeable treatment, as he imagined, from a Lieut. of a man of war, and one word, brought on another, 'till the Lieut. challenged him to a duel on the plains of Abraham. Capt. Littlejohn was a gentleman, who entertained a high sense of honor, and could do no less than accept the challenge.

At nine o'clock the next morning they were to fight. The Capt. returned in the evening, and acquainted his Lieut. and me with the affair : His Lieut. was a high blooded Scotchman as well as himself, who replied to his Capt. that he should not want for a second. With this I interrupted him and gave the Capt. to understand that, since an opportunity had presented, I would be glad to testify my gratitude to him, by acting the part of a faithful second, on which he gave me his hand, and said that he wanted no better man. Says he, I am a King's officer, and you a prisoner under my care ; you must therefore go with me to the place appointed in disguise, and added farther ; " You must engage me, upon the honor of a gentleman, that, whether I die or live, or whatever happens, provided you live, that you will return to my Lieut. on board this ship." All this I solemnly engaged him. The combatants were to discharge each a pocket pistol, and then to fall on with their iron-hilted muckle whangers ; and one of that sort was allotted for me ; but some British officers, who interposed early in the morning, settled the controversy without fighting.

Now having enjoyed eight or nine days' happiness, from the polite and generous treatment of Capt. Littlejohn and his officers, I was obliged to bid them farewell, parting with them in as friendly a manner as we had lived together, which, to the best of my memory, was the eleventh of November: When a detachment of Gen. Arnold's little army appeared on point Levy,* opposite Quebec, who had performed an extraordinary march through a wilderness country, with design to have surprized the capital of Canada; I was then taken on board a vessel called the Adamant, together with the prisoners taken with me, and put under the power of an English merchant from London, whose name was Brook Watson: a man of malicious and cruel disposition, and who was probably excited, in the exercise of his malevolence, by a junto of tories, who sailed with him to England;

* Levi, a point of land in the river St. Lawrence, opposite to the city of Quebec.

among whom were Col. Guy Johnson, Col. Closs, and their attendants and associates, to the number of about thirty.

All the ship's crew, Col. Closs, in his personal behavior excepted, behaved towards the prisoners with that spirit of bitterness, which is the peculiar characteristic of Tories, when they have the friends of America in their power, measuring their loyalty to the English King by the barbarity, fraud, and deceit which they exercise towards the whigs.

A small place in the vessel, enclosed with white-oak plank, was assigned for the prisoners, and for me among the rest. I should imagine that it was not more than twenty feet one way, and twenty two the other : Into this place we were all, to the number of thirty four, thrust and hand-cuffed, two prisoners more being added to our number, and were provided with two excrement tubs ; in this circumference we were obliged to eat and perform the offices of evacuation, during the voyage to England ; and were insulted by ev-cry black-guard sailor and tory on board, in the cruellest manner ; but what is the most surprizing is, that not one of us died in the passage. When I was first ordered to go into the filthy enclosure, through a small sort of door, I positively refused, and endeavoured to reason the before named Brook Watson out of a conduct so derogatory to every sentiment of honor and humanity, but all to no purpose, my men being forced in the den already ; and the rascal who had the charge of the prisoners commanded me to go immediately in among the rest : He farther added that the place was good enough for a rebel ; that it was impertinent for a capital offender to talk of honor or humanity ; that any thing short of a halter, was too good for me ; and that that would be my portion soon after I landed in England ; for which purpose only I was sent thither. About the same time a Lieut. among the tories, insulted me in a grievous manner, saying that I ought to have been executed for my rebellion against New-York, and spit in my face ; upon which, though I was hand-cuffed, I sprang at him with both hands, and knocked him partly down, but he scrambled along into the cabin, and I after him ; there he got under the protection of some men with fixed bayonets, who were ordered to make ready to drive me into the place aforementioned. I challenged him to fight, notwithstanding the impediments that were on my hands, and had the exalted pleasure to see the rascal tremble for fear ; his name I have forgot, but Watson ordered his guard to get me into the place with the other prisoners, dead or alive ; and I had almost as lieve die as do it, standing it out till they environed me round with bayonets ; and brutish, prejudiced, abandoned wretches they were, from whom I could expect nothing but death or wounds : However, I told them, that they were good honest fellows ; that I could not blame them ; that I was only in a dispute with a calicoe merchant, who knew not how to behave towards a gentleman of the military establishment. This was spoke rather to appease them for my own preservation, as well as to treat Watson with contempt ; but still I found that they were determined to force me into the wretched circumstances, which their prejudiced, and depraved minds had prepared for me ; Therefore, rather than die, I submitted to their indignities, being drove with bayonets into the filthy dungeon, with the other prisoners, where we were denied fresh water, except a small allowance, which was very inadequate to our wants ; and, in consequence of the stench of the place, each of us was soon followed with a diarrhœa and fever, which occasioned an intolerable thirst. When we asked for water, we were, most commonly, instead of obtaining it, insulted and derided ; and, to add to all the horrors of the place, it was so dark that we could not see each other, and were overspread with body lice. We had, notwithstanding these severities, full allowance of salt provisions, and a gill of rum per day ; the latter of which was of the utmost service to us, and, probably, was the means of saving several of our lives. About forty days we existed in this manner, when the land's end of England was discovered from the mast head ; soon after which the prisoners were taken from their gloomy abode, being permitted to see the light of the sun, and breathe fresh air, which to us was very refreshing. The day following we landed at Falmouth.*

A few days before I was taken prisoner, I shifted my clothes, by which I happened to be taken in a Canadian dress, viz. a short fawn skin jacket, double breasted, an under-vest and breeches of sagathy, worsted stockings, a decent pair of shoes, two plain shirts, and a red worsted cap: This was all the clothing I had, in which I made my appearance in England.

When the prisoners were landed, multitudes of the citizens of Falmouth, excited by

* This description of the sufferings of Col. Allen induces one to execrate the perpetrators. Such cruelties are fit only for the vilest of criminals. The brave should respect the brave. But, in all offices, there may be found individuals who dishonor their stations. We are unwilling to believe that such treatment ought to stigmatize a whole nation generally; the power of these officers was abused; and we see Man curiosity, crowded together to see us, which was equally gratifying to us. I saw numbers of people on the tops of houses, and the rising adjacent grounds were covered with them of both sexes: The throng was so great, that the King's officers were obliged to draw their swords, and force a passage to Pendennis castle, which was near a mile from the town, where we were closely confined, in consequence of orders from Gen. Carlton, who then commanded in Canada.

The rascally Brook Watson then set out for London in great haste, expecting the reward of his zeal; but the ministry received him, as I have been since informed, rather coolly; for the minority in parliament took advantage, arguing that the opposition of America to Great Britain, was not a rebellion: If it is, say they, why do you not execute Col. Allen, according to law? but the majority argued, that I ought to be executed, and that the opposition was really a rebellion, but that policy obliged them not to do it, inasmuch as the Congress had then most prisoners in their power; so that my being sent to England, for the purpose of being executed, and necessity restraining them, was rather a foil on their laws and authority, and they consequently disapproved of my being sent thither: But I never had heard the least hint of those debates, in parliament, or of the working of their policy, till some time after I left England.

Consequently the reader will readily conceive I was anxious about my preservation, knowing that I was in the power of a haughty and cruel nation, considered as such. Therefore, the first proposition which I determined in my own mind was, that humanity and moral suasion would not be consulted in the determining of my fate; and those that daily came in great numbers, out of curiosity, to see me, both gentle and simple, united in this, that I would be hanged. A gentleman from America, by the name of Temple,* and who was friendly to me, just whispered me in the ear, and told me, that bets were laid in London, that I would be executed; he likewise privately gave me a guinea, but durst say but little to me.

However, agreeable to my first negative proposition, that moral virtue would not influence my destiny, I had recourse to stratagem, which I was in hopes would move in the circle of their policy. I requested of the commander of the castle the privilege of writing to Congress, who, after consulting with an officer that lived in town, of a superior rank, permitted me to write. I wrote, in the fore part of the letter, a short narrative of my ill treatment; but withal let them know that, though I was treated as a criminal in England, and continued in irons, together with those taken with me, yet it was in consequence of the orders which the commander of the castle received from General Carlton; and therefore desired Congress to desist from matters of retaliation, till they should know the result of the government in England, respecting their treatment towards me, and the prisoners with me, and govern themselves accordingly, with a particular request, that if retaliation should be found necessary, it might be exercised not according to the smallness of my character in America, but in proportion to the importance of the cause for which I suffered—This is, according to my present recollection, the substance of the letter, inscribed, To the illustrious Continental Congress. This letter was wrote with a view that it should be sent to the ministry at London, rather than to Congress, with a design to intimidate the haughty English government, and screen my neck from the halter.

The next day the officer, from whom I obtained licence to write, came to see me, and frowned on me on account of the impudence of the letter, as he phrased it, and farther added, “Do you think that we are fools in England, and would send your letter to Congress, with instructions to retaliate on our own people? I have sent your letter to Lord North.” This gave me inward satisfaction, though I carefully concealed it with a pretended resentment, for I found I had come Yankee over him, and that the letter had gone to the identical person I designed it for. Nor do I know, to this day, but that it had the desired effect, though I have not heard any thing of the letter since.

My personal treatment by Lieut. Hamilton, who commanded the castle, was very generous. He sent me every day a fine breakfast and dinner from his own table, and a bottle of good wine. Another aged gentleman, whose name I cannot recollect, sent me a good supper : But there was no distinction in public support between me and the privates ; we all lodged on a sort of Dutch bunks, in one common apartment, and were allowed straw. The privates were well supplied with fresh provision, and with me, took effectual measures to rid ourselves of lice.

I could not but feel, inwardly, extremely anxious for my fate. This I however concealed from the prisoners, as well as from the enemy, who were perpetually shaking the halter at me. I nevertheless treated them with scorn and contempt : and, having sent my letter to the ministry, could conceive of nothing more in my power but to keep up my spirits, behave in a daring, soldier-like manner, that I might exhibit a good sample of American fortitude.* Such a conduct, I judged, would have a more probable tendency to my preservation than concession and timidity. This, therefore, was my deportment ; and I had lastly determined, in my own mind, that if a cruel death must inevitably be my portion, I would face it undaunted ; and, though I greatly rejoice that I have returned to my country and friends, and to see the power and pride of Great Britain humbled ; yet I am confident I could then have died without the least appearance of dismay.

I now clearly recollect that my mind was so resolved, that I would not have trembled or shewn the least fear, as I was sensible it could not alter my fate, nor do more than re-

* The British must doubtless have had a high idea of the personal prowess of Col. Allen ; and however superior their regular discipline might have appeared in their own eyes, yet they could not but respect the courage of an enemy. proach my memory, make my last act despicable to my enemies, and eclipse the other actions of my life. For I reasoned thus, that nothing was more common than for men to die with their friends around them, weeping and lamenting over them, but not able to help them, which was in reality not different in the consequence of it from such a death as I was apprehensive of; and, as death was the natural consequence of animal life to which the laws of nature subject mankind, to be timorous and uneasy as to the event or manner of it, was inconsistent with the character of a philosopher or soldier. The cause I was engaged in, I ever viewed worthy hazarding my life for, nor was I, in the most critical moments of trouble, sorry that I engaged in it; and, as to the world of spirits, though I knew nothing of the mode or manner of it, I expected nevertheless, when I should arrive at such a world, that I should be as well treated as other gentlemen of my merit.

Among the great numbers of people, who came to the castle to see the prisoners, some gentlemen told me, that they had come fifty miles on purpose to see me, and desired to ask me a number of questions, and to make free with me in conversation. I gave for answer, that I chose freedom in every sense of the word: Then one of them asked me what my occupation in life had been? I answered him, that in my younger days I had studied divinity, but was a conjurer by profession. He replied, that I conjured wrong at the time that I was taken; and I was obliged to own, that I mistook a figure at that time, but that I had conjured them out of Ticonderoga. This was a place of great notoriety in England, so that the joke seemed to go in my favour.

It was a common thing for me to be taken out of close confinement, into a spacious green in the castle, or rather parade, where numbers of gentlemen and ladies were ready to see and hear me. I often entertained such audiences with harrangues on the impracticability of Great Britain's conquering the then colonies of America. At one of these times I asked a gentleman for a bowl of punch, and he ordered his servant to bring it, which he did, and offered it to me, but I refused to take it from the hand of his servant ; he then gave it to me with his own hand, refusing to drink with me in consequence of my being a state criminal : However, I took the punch and drank it all down at one draught, and handed the gentleman the bowl : This made the spectators as well as myself merry.*

I expatiated on American freedom : This gained the resentment of a young beardless gentleman of the company,† who gave himself very great airs, and replied, that he “ knew the Americans very well, and was certain that they could not bear the smell of powder. I replied, that I accepted it is a challenge, and was ready to convince him on the spot, that an American could bear the smell of powder ; at which he answered that he should not put himself on a par with me.

* Those, who are acquainted with the exhilarating effect of this delicious beverage, can easily give credit to this assertion of our hero.

† Probably some London cockney. There are people of this description in all countries, ready to mock at misfortune, and insult the wretched.

I then demanded of him to treat the character of the Americans with due respect. He answered that I was an Irishman ; but I assured him, that I was a full blooded Yankee, and, in fine, bantered him so much, that he left me in possession of the ground, and the laugh went against him. Two clergymen came to see me, and, inasmuch as they behaved with civility, I returned them the same : We discoursed on several parts of moral philosophy and christianity; and they seemed to be surprised, that I should be acquainted with such topics, or that I should understand a syllogism, or regular mode of argumentation. I am apprehensive my Canadian dress contributed not a little to the surprise, and excitement of curiosity : to see a gentleman in England, regularly dressed and well behaved, would be no sight at all ; but such a rebel, as they were pleased to call me, it is probable, was never before seen in England.

The prisoners were landed at Falmouth a few days before Christmas, and ordered on board of the Solebay frigate, Capt. Symonds, the eighth day of January, 1776, when our hand irons were taken off. This remove was in consequence, as I have been since informed, of a writ of habeas corpus, which had been procured by some gentlemen in England, in order to obtain me my liberty.

The Solebay, with sundry other men of war, and about forty transports, rendezvoused at the cove of Cork in Ireland, to take in provision and water.

When we were first brought on board, Capt. Symonds ordered all the prisoners, and most of the hands on board, to go on the deck, and caused to be read, in their hearing, a certain code of laws, or rules for the regulation and ordering of their behavior; and then, in a sovereign manner, ordered the prisoners, me in particular, off the deck, and never to come on it again; for, said he, this is a place for gentlemen to walk. So I went off, an officer following me, who told me, that he would shew me the place allotted for me, and took me down to the cable tire, saying to me, this is your place.

Prior to this I had taken cold, by which I was in an ill state of health, and did not say much to the officer ; but stayed there that night, consulted my policy, and found I was in an evil case ; that a Capt. of a man of war was more arbitrary than a King, as he could view his territory with a look of his eye, and a movement of his finger commanded obedience. I felt myself more desponding than I had done at any time before ; for I concluded it to be a governmental scheme, to do that clandestinely which policy forbid to be done under sanction of public justice and law.*

However, two days after I shaved and cleansed myself as well as I could, and went on deck. The Capt. spoke to me in a great rage, and said, “ Did I not order you not to come on deck ? ” I answered him, that at the same time he said, “ That it was the place for gentlemen to walk ; that I was Col. Allen, but had not been properly introduced to him.” He replied, “ G-d damn you, Sir, be careful not to walk the same side of the deck that I do." This gave me encouragement, and ever after that I walked in the manner he had directed, except when he, at certain times afterwards, ordered me off in a passion, and I then would directly afterwards go on again, telling him to command his slaves ; that I was a gentleman, and had a right to walk the deck ; yet when he expressly ordered me off, I obeyed, not out of obedience to him, but to set an example to his ship's crew, who ought to obey him.

To walk to the windward side of the deck is, according to custom, the prerogative of the Capt. of the man of war, though he, oftentimes, nay commonly, walks with his lieutenants, when no strangers are by : When a Capt. from some other man of war, comes on board, the Capts. walk to the windward side, and the other gentlemen to the leeward.

It was but a few nights I lodged in the cable tire, before I gained an acquaintance with the master of arms ; his name was Gillegan, an Irishman, who was a generous and well disposed man, and, in a friendly manner made me an offer of living with him in a little birth, which was allotted him between decks, and enclosed with canvas; his preferment on board was about equal to that of a sergeant in a regiment. I was comparatively happy in the acceptance of his clemency, and lived with him in friendship, till the frigate anchored in the harbor of cape Fear, North-Carolina, in America.

Nothing of material consequence happened till the fleet rendezvoused at the cove of Cork, except a violent storm which brought old hardy sailors to their prayers. It was soon rumoured in Cork that I was on board the Solebay, with a number of prisoners from America; upon which Messrs. Clark and Hays, merchants in company, and a number of other benevolently disposed gentlemen, contributed largely to the relief and support of the prisoners, who were thirty-four in number, and in very needy circumstances. A suit of clothes from head to foot, including an overcoat, or surtout, and two shirts, were bestowed on each of them. My suit I received in superfine broadcloths, sufficient for two jackets, and two pair of breeches overplus of a suit throughout, eight fine Holland shirts and stocks ready made, with a number of pairs of silk and worsted hose, two pair of shoes, two beaver hats, one of which was sent me richly laced with gold, by Mr. James Bonwell. The Irish gentlemen furthermore made a large gratuity of wines of the best sort, old spirits, Geneva, loaf and brown sugar, coffee, tea and chocolate, with a large round of pickled beef, and a number of fat turkies, with many other articles, for my sea stores, too tedious to mention here. To the privates they bestowed on each man two pounds of tea, and six pounds of brown sugar. These articles were received on board, at a time when the Capt. and first Lieut. were gone on shore, by permission of the second Lieut. a handsome young gentleman, who was then under twenty years of age; his name was Douglass, the son of Admiral Douglass, as I was informed.

As this munificence was so unexpected and plentiful, I may add needful, it impressed on my mind the highest sense of gratitude towards my benefactors; for I was not only supplied with the necessaries and conveniences of life, but with the grandeurs and superfluities of it. Mr. Hays, one of the donors before mentioned, came on board, and behaved in the most obliging manner, telling me, that he hoped my troubles were past ; for that the gentlemen of Cork determined to make my sea-stores equal to those of the Capt. of the Solebay's ; he made an offer of live stock and wherewith to support them ; but I knew this would be denied : And to crown all, did send to me by another person fifty guineas, but I could not reconcile receiving the whole to my own feelings, as it might have the appearance of avarice ; and therefore received but seven guineas only ; and am confident, not only from the exercise of the present well-timed generosity, but from a large acquaintance with gentlemen of this nation, that as a people they excel in liberality and bravery.*

* This tribute to the generosity of the Irish character is well merited. Except among the lowest and most ignorant, hospitality and generosity are proverbial ; and though a degree of ridicule is cast over the national character, by applying to them the commission of most of the bulls which are current among us, yet the well

Two days after the receipt of the aforesaid donations, Capt. Symonds came on board, full of envy towards the prisoners, and swore by all that is good, that the damned American rebels should not be feasted at this rate, by the damned rebels of Ireland; he therefore took away all my liquors before-mentioned, except some of the wine which was secreted, and a two gallon jug of old spirits which was reserved for me, per favour of Lieut. Douglass. The taking of my liquors was abominable in his sight; he therefore spoke in my behalf, till the Capt. was angry with him; and, in consequence, proceeded and took away all the tea and sugar, which had been given to the prisoners, and confiscated it to the use of the ship's crew. Our clothing was not taken away, but the privates were forced to do duty on board. Soon after this there came a boat to the side of the ship, and Capt. Symonds asked a gentleman who was in it, in my hearing, what his business was? who informed of all countries do them justice by allowing that they do not fall short of other nations, in literary, philosophical and other attainments.

answered that he was sent to deliver some sea-stores to Col. Allen, which, if I remember right, he said were sent from Dublin; but the Capt. damned him very heartily, ordered him away from the ship, and would not suffer him to deliver the stores. I was farthermore informed, that the gentlemen in Cork requested of Capt. Symonds, that I might be allowed to come into the city, and that they would be responsible I should return to the frigate at a given time, which was denied them.

We sailed from England the 8th day of January, and from the cove of Cork the 12th day of February. Just before we sailed, the prisoners with me were divided, and put on board three different ships of war. This gave me some uneasiness, for they were to a man zealous in the cause of liberty, and behaved with a becoming fortitude in the various scenes of their captivity; but those, who were distributed on board other ships of war, were much better used than those who tarried with me, as appeared afterwards. When the fleet, consisting of about forty five sail, including five men of war, sailed from the cove with a fresh breeze, the appearance was beautiful, abstracted from the unjust and bloody designs they had in view. We had not sailed many days, before a mighty storm arose, which lasted near twenty-four hours without intermission: The wind blew with relentless fury, and no man could remain on deck, except he was lashed fast, for the waves rolled over the deck by turns, with a forcible rapidity and every soul on board was anxious for the preservation of the ship, alias their lives. In this storm the Thunder-bomb man of war sprang a leak, and was afterwards floated to some part of the coast of England, and the crew saved. We were then said to be in the bay of Biscay. After the storm abated, I could plainly discern that the prisoners were better used for some considerable time.*

* The cause of the alteration is left to conjecture. Probably, however, it was from compunction for the unwarrantable severity inflicted on the prisoners, and their alarm, during the storm, might have made them apprehensive that this war of the elements was occasioned by the displeasure of the Deity. Imminent danger would have a tendency to relax the iron hand of oppres-

Nothing of consequence happened after this, till we had sailed to the island of Madeira, except a certain favour which I received of Capt. Symonds, in consequence of an application I made to him, for the privilege of his tailor to make me a suit of clothes of the cloth bestowed on me in Ireland, which he generously granted. I could then walk the deck with a seeming better grace. When we had reached Madeira, and anchored, sundry gentlemen with the Capt. went on shore, who I conclude gave the rumor that I was in the frigate ; upon which I soon after found Irish generosity was again excited ; for a gentleman of the nation sent his clerk on board, to know of me if I would accept a sea-store from him, particularly of wine. This matter I made known to the generous Lieut. Douglass, who readily granted me the favor, provided the articles could be brought on board, during the time of his command ; adding that it would be a pleasure to him to serve

me, notwithstanding the opposition he met with before : So I directed the gentleman's clerk to inform him, that I was greatly in need of so signal a charity, and desired the young gentleman to make the utmost dispatch, which he did ; but, in the mean time, Capt. Symonds and his officers came on board, and immediately made ready for sailing ; the wind at the same time being fair, set sail when the young gentleman was in fair sight with the aforesaid store.*

The reader will doubtless recollect the seven guineas I received at the cove of Cork : These enabled me to purchase of the purser what I wanted, had not the Capt. strictly forbidden it, though I made sundry applications to him for that purpose ; but his answer to me, when I was sick, was, that it was no matter how soon I was dead, and that he was no ways anxious to preserve the lives of rebels, but wished them all dead ; and indeed that was the language of most of the ship's crew. I expostulated not only with the Capt. but with other gentlemen on board, on the unreasonableness of such usage; inferring that, inasmuch as the government in England did not proceed against me as a capital offender, they should not; for that they were by no means empowered by any authority, either civil or military, to do so; for the English government had acquitted me by sending me back a 'prisoner of war to America, and that they should treat me as such. I farther drew an inference of impolicy on them, provided they should, by hard usage, destroy my life; inasmuch as I might, if living, redeem one of their officers; but the Capt. replied, that he needed no directions of mine how to treat a rebel; that the British would conquer the American rebels, hang the Congress, and such as promoted the rebellion, me in particular, and retake their own prisoners; so that my life was of no consequence in the scale of their policy. I gave him for answer, that if they stayed till they conquered America, before they hanged me,

* This will remind the classical reader of the story of TANTALUS. The deprivation, however, must have been more severely felt by Col. Allen, in the same proportion that wine is more palatable than water.

I should die of old age, and desired that till such an event took place, he would at least allow me to purchase of the purser, for my own money, such articles as I greatly needed ; but he would not permit it, and when I reminded him of the generous and civil usage that their prisoners in captivity in America met with, he said that it was not owing to their goodness, but to their timidity ; for, said he, they expect to be conquered, and therefore dare not misuse our prisoners ; and in fact, this was the language of the British officers, till Gen. Burgoyne was taken ;* happy event ! and not only of the officers, but of the whole British army. I appeal to all my brother prisoners, who have been with the British in the southern department, for a confirmation of what I have advanced on this subject. The surgeon of the Solebay, whose name is North, was a very humane obliging man, and took the best care of the prisoners who were sick.

* It was the plan of the British generals, to push a body of troops from New-York, to join general Burgoyne at Albany, and by establishing a line of British posts on the Hudson, to intercept the intercourse between the New-England and southern states. While general Burgoyne was attempting to advance towards Albany, General Clinton with a force of three thousand men took possession of fort Montgomery, after severe loss. General Vaughan, with a body of troops, on board of armed ships sailed, up the Hudson, as far as Livingston's manor, where he landed a party, burnt a large house belonging to one of the family ; then sent a party to the opposite shore and laid in ashes the town of Kingston. But general Burgoyne, despairing of the junction between his army and the division from New-York, surrounded by a superior army, and unable to retreat, consented to capitulate, and on the 17th of October, sur-

The third day of May we cast anchor in the harbor of Cape Fear,* in North-Carolina, as did Sir Peter Parker's ship, of fifty guns, a little back of the bar; for there was no depth of water for him to come into the harbour: These two men of war, and four-rendered to the American general. The detachment under general Vaughan returned to New-York and the plan of the British commanders was totally frustrated.

teen sail of transports and others, came after, so that most of the fleet rendezvoused at cape Fear, for three weeks. The soldiers on board the transports were sickly, in consequence of so long a passage; add to this, the small pox carried off many of them: They landed on the main, and formed a camp; but the riflemen annoyed them, and caused them to move to an island in the harbour; but such cursing of riflemen I never heard.

A detachment of regulars was sent up Brunswick river; as they landed, they were fired on by those marksmen, and they came back next day damning the rebels for their unmanly way of fighting, and swearing that they would give no quarter, for they took sight at them, and were behind timber, skulking about. One of the detachments said they lost one man; but a negro man who was with them, and heard what was said soon after told me that he helped to bury thirty-one of them: This did me some good to find my countrymen giving them battle; for I never heard such swaggering as among Gen. Clinton's little army, who commanded at that time ; and I am apt to think there were four thousand men, though not two thirds of them fit for duty. I heard numbers of them say, that the trees in America should hang well with fruit that campaign for they would give no quarter : This was in the mouths of most who I heard speak on the subject, officer as well as soldier. I wished at that time my countrymen knew, as well as I did, what a murdering and cruel enemy they had to deal with ; but experience has since taught this country, what they are to expect at the hands of Britons when in their power.

The prisoners, who had been sent on board different men of war at the cove of Cork, were collected together, and the whole of them put on board the Mercury frigate, Capt. James Montague, except one of the Canadians, who died on the passage from Ireland, and Peter Noble, who made his escape from the Sphynx man of war in this harbour, and, by extraordinary swimming, got safe home to New-England, and gave intelligence of the usage of his brother prisoners. The Mercury set sail from this port for Halifax, about the 20th of May, and Sir Peter Parker was about to sail with the land forces, under the command of Gen. Clinton, for the reduction of Charleston, the capital of South-Carolina, and when I heard of his defeat in Halifax, it gave me inexpressible satisfaction.

I now found myself under a worse Capt. than Symonds; for Montague was loaded with prejudices against every body, and every thing that was not stamped with royalty; and, being by nature underwitted, his wrath was heavier than the others, or at least his mind was in no instance liable to be diverted by good sense, humour or bravery, of which Symonds was by turns susceptible. A Capt. Francis Proctor was added to our number of prisoners when we were first put on board this ship: This gentleman had formerly belonged to the English service. The Capt. and, in fine, all the gentlemen of the ship, were very much incensed against him, and put him in irons without the least provocation, and he was continued in this miserable situation about three months. In this passage the prisoners were infected with the scurvy, some more and some less, but most of them severely. The ship's crew was to a great degree troubled with it, and I concluded that it was catching: Several of the crew died with it on their passage. I was weak and feeble in consequence of so long and cruel a captivity, yet had but little of the scurvy.

The purser was again expressly forbid by the Capt. to let me have any thing out of his store; upon which I went on deck, and, in the handsomest manner requested the favour of purchasing a few necessaries of the purser, which was denied me; he farther told me, that I should be hanged as soon as I arrived at Halifax. I tried to reason the matter with him, but found him proof against reason; I also held up his honor to view, and his behavior to me and the prisoners in general, as being derogatory to it, but found his honor impenetrable. I then endeavored to touch his humanity, but found he had none; for his prepossession of bigotry to his own party, had confirmed him in an opinion, that no humanity was due to unroyalists, but seemed to think that heaven and earth were made merely to gratify the King and his creatures; he uttered considerable unintelligible and grovelling ideas, a little tinctured with Monarchy, but stood well to his text of hanging me. He afterwards forbade his surgeon to administer any help to the sick prisoners.* I was every night shut down in the cable tire, with the rest of the prisoners, and we all lived miserably while under his power: But I received some generosity from several of the midshipmen, who in degree alleviated my misery; one of their names was Putrass, the names of the others I do not recollect; but they were obliged to be private in the bestowment of their favour, which was sometimes good wine bitters; and at others, a generous drink of grog.

Some time in the first week of June, we came to anchor at the Hook off New-York,

* This, if Col. Allen was not under a mistake, must have been the acme of inhumanity. For the honour of human nature, we trust it is. He must be a monster, indeed, who could issue commands of so brutal a nature.

where we remained but three days ; in which time Gov. Tryon, Mr. Kemp, the old attorney Gen. of New-York, and several other perfidious and over-grown tories and land-jobbers, came on board. Tryon viewed me with a stern countenance, as I was walking on the leeward side of the deck, with the midshipmen ; and he and his companions were walking with the Capt. and Lieut. on the windward side of the same, but never spoke to me, though it is altogether probable that he thought of the old quarrel between him, the old government of New-York and the Green Mountain Boys : Then they went with the Capt. into the cabin, and the same afternoon returned on board a vessel which lay near the Hook, where at that time they took sanctuary from the resentment of their injured country. What passed between the officers of the ship and these visitors I know not ; but this I know, that my treatment from the principal officers was more severe afterwards.

We arrived at Halifax not far from the middle of June, where the ship's crew, which was infested with the scurvy, were taken on shore, and shallow trenches dug, into which they were put, and partly covered with earth. Indeed every proper measure was taken for their relief : The prisoners were not permitted any sort of medicine, but were put on board a sloop which lay in the harbour, near the town of Halifax, surrounded with several men of war and their tenders, and a guard constantly set over them, night and day. The sloop we had wholly to ourselves, except the guard, who occupied the fore-castle ; here we were cruelly pinched with hunger ; it seemed to me that we had not more than one third of the common allowance : We were all seized with violent hunger and faintness ; we divided our scanty allowance as exact as possible. I shared the same fate with the rest, and, though they offered me more than an even share, I refused to accept it, as it was a time of substantial distress, which in my opinion I ought to partake equally with the rest, and set an example of virtue and fortitude to our little commonwealth.

I sent letter after letter to Capt. Montague, who still had the care of us, and also to his Lieutenant, whose name I cannot call to mind, but could obtain no answer, much less a redress of grievances; and, to add to the calamity, near a dozen of the prisoners were dangerously ill of the scurvy. I wrote private letters to the doctors, to procure, if possible, some remedy for the sick, but in vain. The chief physician came by in a boat, so close that the oars touched the sloop we were in, and I uttered my complaint in the genteelest manner to him, but he never so much as turned his head, or made me any answer, though I continued speaking till he got out of hearing. Our cause then became very deplorable. Still I kept writing to the Captain, till he ordered the guards, as they told me, not to bring any more letters from me to him. In the mean time an event happened worth relating: One of the men, almost dead of the scurvy, lay by the side of the sloop, and, a canoe of Indians coming by, he purchased two quarts of strawberries, and ate them at once, and it almost cured him. The money he gave for them, was all the money he had in the world. After that we tried every way to procure more of that fruit, reasoning from analogy that they might have the same effect on others infested with the same disease, but could obtain none.*

Meanwhile the Doctor's mate of the Mercury came privately on board the prison sloop, and presented me with a large vial of smart drops, which proved to be good for the scurvy, though vegetables and some other ingredients were requisite for a cure; but the drops gave at least a check to the disease: This was a well-timed exertion of humanity, but the doctor's name has slipped my mind, and, in my opinion, it was the means of saving the lives of several men.

The guard, which was set over us, was by this time touched with the feelings of compassion; and I finally trusted one of them with a letter of complaint to Governor Ar-bathnot, of Halifax, which he found means to communicate, and which had the desired effect ; for the Governor sent an officer and surgeon on board the prison sloop, to know the truth of the complaint. The officer's name was Russel, who held the rank of Lieut. and treated me in a friendly and polite manner, and was really angry at the cruel and unmanly usage the prisoners met with ; and, with the surgeon, made a true report of matters to Gov. Arbuthnot, who, either by his order or influence, took us next day from the prison sloop to Halifax gaol, where I first became acquainted with the now Hon. James Lovel, Esq. one of the members of Congress for the State of Massachusetts-Bay. The sick were taken to the hospital, and the Canadians, who were effective, were employed in the King's works ; and when their countrymen were recovered from the scurvy and joined them, they all deserted the King's employ, and were not heard of at Halifax, as long as the remainder of the prisoners continued there, which was till near the middle of October. We were on board the prison-sloop about six weeks, and were landed at Halifax near the middle of August. Several of our English American prisoners, who were cured of the scurvy at the hospital, made their escape from thence, and after a long time reached their old habitations.

I had now but thirteen with me, of those who were taken in Canada, and remained in gaol with me in Halifax, who, in addition to those that were imprisoned before, made our number about thirty four, who were all locked up in one common large room, without regard to rank, education, or any other accomplishment, where we continued from the setting to the rising sun; and, as sundry of them were infected with the gaol and other distempers, the furniture of this spacious room consisted principally of excrement tubs. We petitioned for a removal of the sick into the hospitals, but were denied. We remonstrated against the ungenerous usage of being confined with the privates, as being contrary to the laws and customs of nations, and particularly ungrateful in them, in consequence of the gentleman-like usage which the British imprisoned officers met with in America ; and thus we wearied ourselves, petitioning and remonstrating, but to no purpose at all ; for Gen. Massey, who commanded at Halifax, was as inflexible as the Devil himself, a fine preparative this for Mr. Lovel, member of the Continental Congress.

Lieut. Russel, whom I have mentioned before, came to visit me in prison, and assured me that he had done his utmost to procure my parole for enlargement ; at which a British Captain, who was then the town-major, expressed compassion for the gentlemen confined in the filthy place, and assured me that he had used his influence to procure their enlargement ; his name was near like Ramsay. Among the prisoners there were five in number, who had a legal claim to a parole, viz. James Lovel, Esq. Capt. Francis Proctor, a Mr. Howland, master of a Continental armed vessel, a Mr. Taylor, his mate and myself.

As to the article of provision, we were well served, much better than in any part of my captivity ; and, since it was Mr. Lovel's misfortune and mine to be prisoners, and in so wretched circumstances, I was happy that we were together as a mutual support to each other, and to the unfortunate prisoners with us. Our first attention was the preservation of ourselves and injured little republic ; the rest of our time we devoted interchangeably to politics and philosophy, as patience was a needful exercise in so evil a situation, but contentment mean and impracticable.

I had not been in this gaol many days, before a worthy and charitable woman, Mrs. Blacden, by name, supplied me with a good dinner of fresh meats every day, with garden fruit, and sometimes with a bottle of wine ; notwithstanding which I had not been more than three weeks in this place, before I lost all appetite to the most delicious food, by the gaol distemper, as also did sundry of the prisoners, particularly a sergeant Moore, a man of courage and fidelity : I have several times seen him hold the boatswain of the Solebay frigate, when he attempted to strike him, and laughed him out of conceit of using him as a slave.

A doctor visited the sick, and did the best, as I suppose, he could for them, to no apparent purpose. I grew weaker and weaker, as did the rest. Several of them could not help themselves. At last I reasoned in my own mind, that raw onion would be good : I made use of it, and found immediate relief by it, as did the sick in general, particularly sergeant Moore, whom it recovered almost from the shades ; though I had met with a little revival, still I found the malignant hand of Britain had greatly reduced my constitution with stroke upon stroke. Esquire Lovel and myself used every argument and entreaty that could be well conceived of, in order to obtain gentlemanlike usage, to no purpose. I then wrote Gen. Massey as severe a letter as I possibly could, with my friend Lovel's assistance : The contents of it was to give the British, as a nation, and him as an individual, their true character. This roused the rascal, for he could not bear to see his and the nation's deformity in that transparent letter,* which I sent him ; he therefore put himself in a great rage about it, and shewed the letter to a number of British officers, particularly to Capt. Smith of the Lark frigate, who, instead of joining with him in disapprobation, commended the spirit of it ; upon which Gen. Massey said to him, do you take the part of a rebel against me ? Capt. Smith answered, that he rather spoke his sentiments, and there was a dissension in opinion between them. Some officers took the part of the General, and others of the Captain : This I was informed of by a gentleman who had it from Capt. Smith.

In a few days after this, the prisoners were ordered to go on board of a man of war, which was bound for New-York ; but two of them were not able to go on board, and were left at Halifax ; one died, and the other recovered. This was about the 12th of October, and soon after we had got on board, the Captain sent for me in particular to come on the quarter deck : I went, not knowing that it was Capt. Smith, or his ship at that time, and expected to meet the same rigorous usage I had commonly met with, and prepared my mind accordingly ; but when I came on deck, the Captain met me with his hand, welcomed me to his ship, invited me to dine with him that day, and assured me that I should be treated as a gentleman, and that he had given orders, that I should be treated with respect by the ship's crew. This was so unexpected and sudden a transition, that it drew tears from my eyes, which all the ill usage I had before met with, was not able to produce, nor could I at first hardly speak, but soon recovered myself and expressed my gratitude for so unexpected a favour ; and let him know that I felt anxiety of mind in reflecting that his situation and mine was such, that it was not probable that it would ever be in my power to return the favour. Capt. Smith replied, that he had no reward in view, but only treated me as a gentleman ought to be treated ; he said this is a mutable world, and one gentleman never knows but that it may be in his power to help another. Soon after I found this to be the same Capt. Smith who took my part against Gen. Massey ; but he never mentioned any thing of it to me, and I thought it impolite in me to interrogate him, as to any disputes which might have arisen between him and the General on my account, as I was a prisoner, and that it was at his option to make free with me on that subject, if he pleased ; and, if he did not, I might take it for granted that it would be displeasing for me to query about it, though I had a strong propensity to converse with him on that subject.

* We can easily excuse, if excuse be necessary, this conduct of the oppressed prisoner. After having tried persuasion, entreaty and every mild mean to have his condition ameliorated, the last resource seemingly was to pourtray his sufferings, and the abuse and cruelty which he had experienced in the most lively colours possible.

I dined with the Captain agreeable to his invitation, and oftentimes with the Lieutenant, in the gun room, but in general ate and drank with my friend Lovel and the other gentlemen, who were prisoners with me, where I also slept.

We had a little birth enclosed with canvas, between decks, where we enjoyed ourselves very well, in hopes of an exchange ; besides, our friends at Halifax had a little notice of our departure, and supplied us with spirituous liquor, and many articles of provision for the cost. Capt. Burk, having been taken prisoner, was added to our company, (he had commanded an American armed vessel) and was generously treated by the Captain and all the officers of the ship, as well as myself. We now had in all near thirty prisoners on board, and as we were sailing along the coast, if I recollect right, off Rhode-Island, Capt. Burk, with an under officer of the ship, whose name I do not recollect, came to our little birth, proposed to kill Capt. Smith and the principal officers of the frigate and take it ; adding that there were thirty five thousand pounds sterling in the same. Capt. Burk likewise averred that a strong party out of the ship's crew was in the conspiracy, and urged me, and the gentleman that was with me, to use our influence with the private prisoners, to execute the design, and take the ship with the cash into one of our own ports.

Upon which I replied, that we had been too well used on board to murder the officers ; that I could by no means reconcile it to my conscience, and that in fact it should not be done ; and, while I was yet speaking, my friend Lovel confirmed what I had said, and farther pointed out the ungratefulness of such an act ; that it did not fall short of murder, and in fine all the gentlemen in the birth opposed Capt. Burk and his colleague : But they strenuously urged that the conspiracy would be found out, and that it would cost them their lives, provided they did not execute their design. I then interposed spiritedly, and put an end to farther argument on the subject, and told them that they might depend upon it, upon my honor, that I would faithfully guard Capt. Smith's life : If they should attempt the assault, I would assist him, for they desired me to remain neuter, and that the same honor that guarded Capt. Smith's life, would also guard theirs ; and it was agreed by those present not to reveal the conspiracy, to the intent that no man should be put to death, in consequence of what had been projected ; and Capt. Burk and his colleague went to stifle the matter among their associates. I could not help calling to mind what Capt. Smith said to me, when I first came on board: "This is a mutable world, and one gentleman never knows but that it may be in his power to help another."* Captain Smith and his officers still behaved with their usual courtesy, and I never heard any more of the conspiracy.

We arrived before New-York, and cast anchor the latter part of October where we remained several days, and where Capt. Smith informed me, that he had recommended me to Adm. Howe and Gen. Sir Wm. Howe, as a gentleman of honor and veracity, and desired that I might be treated as such. Capt. Burk was then ordered on board a prison-ship in the harbor. I took my leave of Capt. Smith, and, with the other prisoners, was sent on board a transport-ship, which lay in the harbour, commanded by Capt. Craige, who took me into the cabin with him and his Lieut. I fared as they did, and was in every respect well treated, in consequence of directions from Capt. Smith. In a few weeks after this I had the happiness to part with my friend Lovel, for his sake, whom the enemy affected to treat as a private ; he was a gentleman of merit, and liberally educated, but had no commission ; they maligned him on account of his unshaken attachment to the cause of his country. He was exchanged for a Gov. Phillip Skene of the British. I was continued in this ship till the latter part of November, where I contracted an acquaintance with the Capt. of the British ; his name has slipped my memory. He was what we may call a genteel hearty fellow. I remember an expression of his over a bottle of wine, to this import : “ That there is greatness of soul for personal friendship to subsist between you and me, as we are upon opposite sides, and may at another day be obliged to face each other in the field.” I am confident that he was as faithful as any officer in the British army. At another sitting he offered to bet a dozen of wine, that fort Washington would be in the hands of the British in three days. I stood the bet, and would, had I known that that would have been the case, and the third day afterwards we heard a prodigious heavy cannonade, and that day the fort was taken sure enough. Some months after, when I was on parole, he called upon me with his usual humour; and mentioned the bet. I acknowledged I had lost it, but he said he did not mean to take it then, as I was a prisoner; that he would another day call on me, when their army came to Bennington. I replied, that he was quite too generous, as I had fairly lost it: besides, the Green Mountain Boys would not suffer them to come to Bennington. This was all in good humour. I should have been glad to have seen him after the defeat at Bennington, but did not. It was customary for a guard to attend the prisoners, which was often changed. One was composed of tories from Connecticut, in the vicinity of Fairfield and Green

* A memorable instance this of the value of a generous action. Had the conduct of Capt. Smith equalled in atrocity and cruelty that of Capt. Simonds of the Solebay, it is not impossible that Col. Allen, goaded by his repeated abuse, might have consented to the killing of the ship's crew. In this instance the pious reader will discern the hand of an overruling providence, who, even in this life, frequently extends to the doer of a good action its appropriate reward.

Farms. The sergeant's name was Hoit. They were very full of their invectives against the country, swaggered of their loyalty to their king, and exclaimed bitterly against the "cowardly yankies," as they were pleased to term them, but finally contented themselves with saying that, when the country was overcome, they should be well rewarded for their loyalty, out of the estates of the whigs, which would be confiscated. This I found to be the general language of tories, after I arrived from England on the American coast. I heard sundry of them relate, that the British Generals had engaged them an ample reward for all their losses, disappointments and expenditures, out of the forfeited rebels' estates. This language early taught me what to do with tories' estates, as far as my influence can go. For it is really a game of hazard between whig and tory: The whigs must inevitably have lost all, in consequence of the abilities of the tories, and their good friends, the British; and it is no more than right the tories should run the same risk, in consequence of the abilities of the whigs : But of this more will be observed in the sequel of this narrative.

Some of the last days of November, the prisoners were landed at New-York, and I was admitted to parole with the other officers, viz. Procter, Howland and Taylor.— The privates were put into the filthy churches in New-York; with the distressed prisoners that were taken at fort Washington ; and the second night, sergeant Roger Moore, who was bold and enterprizing, found means to make his escape with every of the remaining prisoners that were taken with me, except three, who were soon after exchanged : So that, out of thirty-one prisoners, who went with me the round exhibited in these sheets, two only died with the enemy, and three only were exchanged ; one of whom died after he came within our lines ; all the rest, at different times, made their escape from the enemy.*

* The sufferings of our hero, during his captivity, though perhaps the consequence of his own rashness, were brought about by an ardent zeal in the cause of lib-

I now found myself on parole, and restricted to the limits of the city of New-York, where I soon projected means to live in some measure agreeable to my rank, though I was destitute of cash. My constitution was almost worn out by such a long and barbarous captivity. The enemy gave out that I was crazy, and wholly unmanned, but my vitals held sound, nor was I delirious any more than I have been from youth up ; but my extreme circumstances, at certain times, rendered it political to act in some measure the madman ; and, in consequence of a regular diet and exercise, my blood recruited, and my nerves in a great measure recovered their former tone, strength and usefulness, in the course of six months.

I next invite the reader to a retrospective sight and consideration of the doleful scene of inhumanity, exercised by Gen. Sir William Howe, and the army under his command, erty, which made him willing to run hazards which circumstances would hardly justify. Had this not been the case, he would probably have never been carried a prisoner to England.

towards the prisoners taken on Long-Island, on the 27th day of August, 1776 ; sundry of whom were, in an inhuman and barbarous manner, murdered after they had surrendered their arms ; particularly a Gen. Odel, or Woodhul, of the militia, who was hacked to pieces with cutlasses, when alive, by the light horsemen, and a Capt. Fellows, of the Continental army, who was thrust through with a bayonet, of which wound he died instantly.

Sundry others were hanged up by the neck till they were dead ; five on the limb of a white oak tree, and without any reason assigned, except that they were fighting in defence of the only blessing worth preserving : And indeed those who had the misfortune to fall into their hands at fort Washington, in the month of Nov. following, met with but very little better usage, except that they were reserved from immediate death to famish and die with hunger ; in fine, the word rebel, applied to any vanquished persons, without regard to rank, who were in the continental service, on the 27th of August aforesaid, was thought, by the enemy, sufficient to sanctify whatever cruelties they were pleased to inflict, death itself not excepted ; but to pass over particulars which would swell my narrative far beyond my design.

The private soldiers, who were brought to New-York, were crowded into churches, and environed with slavish Hessian guards, a people of a strange language, who were sent to America for no other design but cruelty and desolation ; and at others, by merciless Britons, whose mode of communicating ideas being intelligible in this country served only to tantalize and insult the helpless and perishing ; but, above all, the hellish delight and triumph of the tories over them, as they were dying by hundreds : This was too much for me to bear as a spectator ; for I saw the tories exulting over the dead bodies of their murdered countrymen. I have gone into the churches, and seen sundry of the prisoners in the agonies of death, in consequence of very hunger, and others speechless, and near death, biting pieces of chips ; others pleading for God's sake, for something to eat, and at the same time, shivering with the cold. Hollow groans saluted my ears, and despair seemed to be imprinted on every of their countenances. The filth in these churches, in consequence of the fluxes, was almost beyond description. The floors were covered with excrements. I have carefully sought to direct my steps so as to avoid it, but could not. They would beg for God's sake for one copper, or morsel of bread. I have seen in one of these churches seven dead, at the same time, lying among the excrements of their bodies.

It was a common practice with the enemy, to convey the dead from these filthy places, in carts, to be slightly buried, and I have seen whole gangs of tories making derision, and exulting over the dead, saying, there goes another load of damned rebels. I have observed the British soldiers to be full of their black-guard jokes, and vaunting on those occasions, but they appeared to me less malignant than tories.*

* However the reader of these enormities may feel exasperated, as undoubtedly he does, at the conduct of the British and alienated Americans, it is wrong to ac-

The provision dealt out to the prisoners was by no means sufficient for the support of life: It was deficient in quantity, and much more so in quality. The prisoners often presented me with a sample of their bread, which I certify was damaged to that degree, that it was loathsome and unfit to be eaten, and I am bold to aver it, as my opinion, that it had been condemned, and was of the very worst sort. I have seen and been fed upon damaged bread, in the course of my captivity, and observed the quality of such bread as has been condemned by the enemy, among which was very little so effectually spoiled as what was dealt out to these prisoners. Their allowance of meat (as they told me) was quite trifling, and of the basest sort. I never saw any of it, but was informed, bad as it was, it was swallowed almost as quick cuse a body of men, indiscriminately, of the commission of crimes. Among the latter were no doubt many who were not sorry for, or might exult in the persecution; but as probably there were many who acted from what they deemed principle. A whole sect of any description do not merit denunciation in consequence of the perfidy of a part.

as they got hold of it. I saw some of them sucking bones after they were speechless ; others, who could yet speak, and had the use of their reason, urged me, in the strongest and most pathetic manner, to use my interest in their behalf ; for you plainly see, said they, that we are devoted to death and destruction ; and, after I had examined more particularly into their truly deplorable condition, and had become more fully apprized of the essential facts, I was persuaded that it was a premeditated and systematical plan of the British council, to destroy the youths of our land, with a view thereby to deter the country, and make it submit to their despotism ; but that I could not do them any material service, and that, by any public attempt for that purpose, I might endanger myself by frequenting places the most nauseous and contagious that could be conceived of. I refrained going into the churches, but frequently conversed with such of the prisoners as were admitted to come out into the yard, and found that the systematical usage still continued. The guard would often drive me away with their fixed bayonets. A Hessian one day followed me five or six rods, but by making use of my legs, I got rid of the lubber. Sometimes I could obtain a little conversation, notwithstanding their severities.

I was in one of the church yards, and it was rumoured among those in the church, and sundry of the prisoners came with their usual complaints to me, and among the rest a large boned, tall young man, as he told me, from Pennsylvania, who was reduced to a mere skeleton ; he said he was glad to see me before he died, which he had expected to have done last night, but was a little revived ; he farthermore informed me, that he and his brother had been urged to enlist into the British, but had both resolved to die first ; that his brother had died last night, in consequence of that resolution, and that he expected shortly to follow him ; but I made the other prisoners stand a little off, and told him with a low voice to enlist ; he then asked, whether it was right in the sight of God ? I assured him that it was, and that duty to himself obliged him to deceive the British by enlisting and deserting the first opportunity ; upon which he answered with transport, that he would enlist. I charged him not to mention my name as his adviser, lest it should get air, and I should be closely confined, in consequence of it. The integrity of these suffering prisoners is hardly credible. Many hundreds, I am confident, submitted to death, rather than enlist in the British service, which, I am informed, they most generally were pressed to do. I was astonished at the resolution of the two brothers particularly ; it seems that they could not be stimulated to such exertions of heroism from ambition, as they were but obscure soldiers ; strong indeed must the internal principle of virtue be, which supported them to brave death, and one of them went through the operation, as did many hundred others. I readily grant that instances of public virtue are no excitement to the sordid and vicious, nor, on the other hand, will all the barbarity of Britain and Heshland* awaken them to a sense of their duty

* Meant for Hesse, in Germany. These troops were to the public ; but these things will have their proper effect on the generous and brave.— The officers on parole were most of them zealous, if possible, to afford the miserable soldiery relief, and often consulted with one another on the subject, but to no effect, being destitute of the means of subsistence, which they needed ; nor could the officers project any measure, which they thought would alter their fate, or so much as be a mean of getting them out of those filthy places to the privilege of fresh air. Some projected that all the officers should go in procession to Gen. Howe, and plead the cause of the perishing soldiers ; but this proposal was negatived for the following reasons, viz. because that Gen. Howe must needs be well acquainted, and have a thorough knowledge of the state and condition of the prisoners in every of their wretched apartments, and that much more particular and exact than any officer on what were called mercenaries ; being in the pay of a foreign power. To a free born American, the taking up of arms in any other cause than the defence or honor of his own country, appears indescribably degrading.

parole could be supposed to have, as the General had a return of the circumstances of the prisoners, by his own officers, every morning, of the number which were alive, as also the number which died every twenty four hours ; and consequently the bill of mortality, as collected from the daily returns, lay before him with all the material situations and circumstances of the prisoners ; and provided the officers should go in procession to Gen. Howe, according to the projection, it would give him the greatest affront, and that he would either retort upon them, that it was no part of their parole to instruct him in his conduct to prisoners ; that they were mutinying against his authority, and, by affronting him, had forfeited their parole ; or that, more probably, instead of saying one word to them, would order them all into as wretched a confinement as the soldiers whom they sought to relieve ; for, at that time, the British, from the General to the private sentinel, were in full confidence, nor did they so much as hesitate, but that they should conquer the country. Thus the consultation of the officers was confounded and broken to pieces, in consequence of the dread, which at that time lay on their minds, of offending Gen. Howe ; for they conceived so murderous a tyrant would not be too good to destroy even the officers, on the least pretence of an affront, as they were equally in his power with the soldiers ; and, as Gen. Howe perfectly understood the condition of the private soldiers, it was argued that it was exactly such as he and his council had devised, and as he meant to destroy them it would be to no purpose for them to try to dissuade him from it, as they were helpless and liable to the same fate, on giving the least affront ; indeed anxious apprehensions disturbed them in their then circumstances.

Mean time mortality raged to such an intolerable degree among the prisoners, that the very school boys in the streets knew the mental design of it in some measure ; at least, they knew that they were starved to death. Some poor women contributed to their necessity, till their children were almost starved, and all persons of common understanding knew that they were devoted to the cruelest and worst of deaths. It was also proposed by some to make a written representation of the condition of the soldiery, and the officers to sign it, and that it should be couched in such terms, as though they were apprehensive that the General was imposed upon by his officers, in their daily returns to him of the state and condition of the prisoners; and that therefore the officers, moved with compassion, were constrained to communicate to him the facts relative to them, nothing doubting but that they would meet with a speedy redress; but this proposal was most generally negatived also, and for much the same reason offered in the other case; for it was conjectured that Gen. Howe's indignation would be moved against such officers as should attempt to whip him over his officers' backs; that he would discern that himself was really struck at, and not the officers who made the daily returns; and therefore self preservation deterred the officers from either petitioning or remonstrating to Gen. Howe, either verbally or in writing; as also the consideration that no valuable purpose to the distressed would be obtained.

I made several rough drafts on the subject, one of which I exhibited to the Cols. Magaw, Miles, and Atlee, and they said that they would consider the matter; soon after I called on them, and some of the gentlemen informed me, that they had written to the Gen. on the subject, and I concluded that the gentlemen thought it best that they should write without me, as there was such spirited aversion subsisting between the British and me.

In the mean time a Col. Hussecker, of the continental army, as he then reported, was taken prisoner, and brought to New-York, who gave out that the country was almost universally submitting to the English king's authority, and that there would be little or no more opposition to Great-Britain: This at first gave the officers a little shock, but in a few days they recovered themselves; for this Col. Hussecker, being a German, was feasting with Gen. De Heister, his countryman, and from his conduct they were apprehensive, that he was a knave ; at least he was esteemed so by most of the officers ; it was nevertheless a day of trouble. The enemy blasphemed. Our little army was retreating in New-Jersey, and our young men murdered by hundreds in New-York : The army of Britain and Heshland prevailed for a little season, as though it was ordered by Heaven to shew, to the latest posterity, what the British would have done if they could, and what the general calamity must have been, in consequence of their conquering the country, and to excite every honest man to stand forth in the defence of liberty, and to establish the independency of the United States of America forever : But this scene of adverse fortune did not discourage a Washington : The illustrious American hero remained immoveable. In liberty's cause he took up his sword : This reflection was his support and consolation in the day of his humiliation, when he retreated before the enemy, through New-Jersey into Pennsylvania. Their triumph only roused his indignation ; and the important cause of his country, which lay near his heart, moved him to cross the Delaware again, and take ample satisfaction on his pursuers. No sooner had he circumvallated his haughty foes, and appeared in terrible array, but the host of Heshland fell. This taught America the intrinsic worth of perseverance, and the generous sons of freedom flew to the standard of their common safeguard and defence; from which time the arm of American liberty hath prevailed.*

This surprize and capture of the Hessians enraged the enemy, who were still vastly

* The American army being greatly reduced by the loss of men taken prisoners, and by the departure of men whose enlistments had expired, general Washington was obliged to retreat towards Philadelphia; general Howe, exulting in his successes, pursued him, notwithstanding the weather was severely cold. To add to the disasters of the Americans, general Lee was surprised and taken prisoner at Baskenridge. In this gloomy state of affairs, many persons joined the British cause and took protections. But a small band of heroes checked the tide of British success. A division of Hessians had advanced to Trenton, where they reposed in security. General Washington was on the opposite side of the Delaware, with about three thousand men, many of whom were without shoes or convenient clothing; and the river was covered with floating ice. But the general knew the importance of striking some successful more numerous than the continental troops : They therefore collected, and marched from Princetown, to attack Gen. Washington, who was then at Trenton, having previously left a detachment from their main body at Princetown, for the support of that place. This was a trying time, for our worthy General, though in possession of a late most astonishing victory, was by no means able to withstand the collective force of the enemy ; but his sagacity soon suggested a stratagem to effect that which, by force, to him was at that time impracticable : He therefore amused the enemy with a number of fires, and in the night made a forced march, undiscovered by them, and next morning fell in with their rear guard at Princetown, and killed and took most of them prisoners. The main body too late perceived their rear was attacked, hurried back with all speed, but to their mortification, blow, to animate the expiring hopes of the country ; and on the night of December 25th, crossed the river, and fell on the enemy by surprize, and took the whole body consisting of about nine hundred men. A few were killed, among whom was colonel Rahl the commander.

found they were out-generalled, and baffled by Gen. Washington, who was retired with his little army towards Morristown, and was out of their power.* These repeated successes, one on the back of the other, chagrined the enemy prodigiously, and had an amazing operation in the scale of American politics, and undoubtedly was one of the corner stones, on which their fair structure of Independency has been fabricated; for the

* On the 2d of January 1777, lord Cornwallis appeared near Trenton, with a strong body of troops. Skirmishing took place, and impeded the march of the British army, until the Americans had secured their artillery and baggage; when they retired to the southward of the creek, and repulsed the enemy in their attempt to pass the bridge. As general Washington's force was not sufficient to meet the enemy, and his situation was critical, he determined, with the advice of a council of war, to attempt a stratagem. He gave orders for the troops to light fires in their camp, [which were intended to deceive the enemy,] and be prepared to march. Accordingly at twelve o'clock at night the troops left the ground, and by a circuitous march, eluded the vigilance of the enemy, and early in the morning appeared at Princetown. A smart action ensued, but the British troops gave way. A party took refuge in the college, a building with strong stone walls, but were forced to surrender. The enemy lost in killed, wounded and prisoners, about five hundred men. The Americans lost but few men; but among them was a most valuable officer, general Mercer. [Webster's Elements.

country at no one time has ever been so much dispirited as just before the morning of this glorious success, which in part dispelled the gloomy clouds of oppression and slavery, which lay pending over America, big with the ruin of this and future generations, and enlightened and spirited her sons to redouble their blows on a merciless, and haughty, and, I may add, perfidious enemy.

Farthermore, this success had a mighty effect on Gen. Howe and his council, and roused them to a sense of their own weakness, and convinced them that they were neither omniscient nor omnipotent. Their obduracy and death-designing malevolence, in some measure, abated or was suspended. The prisoners, who were condemned to the most wretched and cruelest of deaths, and who survived to this period, though most of them died before, were immediately ordered to be sent within Gen. Washington's lines, for an exchange, and, in consequence of it, were taken out of their filthy and poisonous places of confinement, and sent out of New-York to their friends in haste ; several of them fell dead in the streets of New-York, as they attempted to walk to the vessels in the harbor, for their intended embarkation. What numbers lived to reach the lines I cannot ascertain, but, from concurrent representations which I have since received from numbers of people who lived in and adjacent to such parts of the country, where they were received from the enemy, I apprehend that most of them died in consequence of the vile usage of the enemy. Some, who were eye-witnesses of that scene of mortality, more especially in that part which continued after the exchange took place, are of opinion, that it was partly in consequence of a slow poison ;* but this I refer to the doctors that attended them, who are certainly the best judges.

Upon the best calculation I have been able to make from personal knowledge, and the

* This conjecture is not probable ; and, however we may feel for the injuries of our oppressed fellow citizens, we need not recur to any thing but facts to prove their severity. If coarse fare, and unwholesome aliment were meant by the colonel, for "slow poison," it was, no doubt, administered to them.

many evidences I have collected in support of the facts, I learn that, of the prisoners taken on Long-Island, fort Washington, and some few others, at different times and places, about two thousand perished with hunger, cold and sickness, occasioned by the filth of their prisons, at New-York, and a number more on their passage to the continental lines ; most of the residue, who reached their friends, having received their death wound, could not be restored by the assistance of physicians and friends ; but, like their brother prisoners, fell a sacrifice to the relentless and scientific barbarity of Britain. I took as much pains as my circumstances would admit of, to inform myself not only of matters of fact, but likewise of the very design and aims of Gen. Howe and his council : The latter of which I predicated on the former, and submit it to the candid public.

And lastly, the aforesaid success of the American arms had a happy effect on the continental officers, who were on parole at New-York : A number of us assembled, but not in a public manner, and, with full bowls and glasses, drank Gen. Washington's health, and were not unmindful of Congress and our worthy friends on the continent, and almost forgot that we were prisoners.

A few days after this recreation, a British officer of rank and importance in their army, whose name I shall not mention in this narrative, for certain reasons, though I have mentioned it to some of my close friends and confidants, sent for me to his lodgings, and told me, "That faithfulness, though in a wrong cause, had nevertheless recommended me to Gen. Sir William Howe, who was minded to make me a Colonel of a regiment of new levies, alias tories, in the British service; and proposed that I should go with him, and some other officers, to England, who would embark for that purpose in a few days, and there be introduced to Lord G. Germaine, and probably to the King; and, that previously I should be clothed equal to such an introduction, and, instead of paper rags, be paid in hard guineas; after this should embark with Gen. Burgoyne, and assist in the reduction of the country, which infallibly would be conquered, and, when that should be done, I should have a large tract of land, either in the New-Hampshire grants, or in Connecticut, it would make no odds, as the country would be forfeited to the crown." I then replied, "That, if by faithfulness I had recommended myself to Gen. Howe, I should be loth, by unfaithfulness, to lose the General's good opinion ; besides, that I viewed the offer of land to be similar to that which the devil offered Jesus Christ, "To give him all the kingdoms of the world, if he would fall down and worship him ;" when at the same time, that the damned soul had not one foot of land upon earth." This closed the conversation, and the gentleman turned from me with an air of dislike, saying, that I was a bigot ; upon which I retired to my lodgings.*

Near the last of November I was admitted to parole in New-York, with many other

* This conduct of colonel Allen, though springing from duty, ought not to be passed over without tributary praise. The refusal of such an offer and in such circumstances, was highly meritorious. Though the American officers, and on the 22d day of January, 1777, was with them directed by the British commissary of prisoners to be quartered on the westerly part of Long-Island, and our parole continued. During my imprisonment there, no occurrences worth observation happened. I obtained the means of living as well as I desired, which in a great measure repaired my constitution, which had been greatly injured by the severities of an inhuman captivity. I now began to feel myself composed, expecting either an exchange, or continuance in good and honorable treatment; but alas! my visionary expectations soon vanished. The news of the conquest of Ticonderoga by Gen. Burgoyne,* and the man of strict honour, and rigid integrity, deems the plaudit of his own conscience an ample reward for his best actions, it is a pleasing employment, to those who witness such actions, to record them. It is an incentive to others to "go and do likewise."

* In June, 1777, the British army, amounting to seven thousand men, besides Indians and Canadians, commanded by general Burgoyne, crossed the lake and laid siege to Ticonderoga. In a short time, the enemy gained possession of Sugar Hill, which commanded the American lines, and general St. Clair, with the advice of a council of war, ordered the posts to be abandoned.

advance of his army into the country, made the haughty Britons again to feel their importance, and with that their insatiable thirst for cruelty.

The private prisoners at New-York, and some of the officers on parole, felt the severity of it. Burgoyne was their to a stand demi-god: To him they paid adoration: In him the tories placed their confidence, “and forgot the Lord, their God,” and served Howe, Burgoyne, and Knyphausen,* “and became vile in their own imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened, professing” to be great politicians, and relying on foreign and merciless invaders, and with them seeking the ruin, bloodshed and destruction of their country, "became fools," expecting with them to share a dividend in the confiscated estates of their neighbours and countrymen who fought for the whole country, and the religion and liberties thereof:—"Therefore God gave them over to strong delusions, to believe a lie, that they all might be damned."

The retreat of the Americans was conducted under every possible disadvantage—part of their force embarked in batteaux and landed at Skenesborough—a part marched by the way of Castletown; but they were obliged to leave their heavy cannon, and, on their march, lost great part of their baggage and stores, while their rear was harrassed by the British troops. An action took place between colonel Warner, with a body of Americans and General Frazer, in which the Americans were defeated, after a brave resistance, with the loss of a valuable officer, colonel Francis.

The 25th day of August I was apprehended, and, under pretext of artful, mean and pitiful pretences, that I had infringed on my parole, taken from a tavern, where there were more than a dozen officers present and, in the very place where those officers and myself were directed to be quartered, put under a strong guard, and taken to New-York, where I expected to make my defence before the commanding officer; but, contrary to my expectations, and without the least solid pretence of justice or a trial, was again encircled with a strong guard with fixed bayonets, and conducted to the provost-gaol in a lonely apartment, next above the dungeon, and was denied all manner of subsistence either by purchase or allowance. The second day I offered a guinea for a meal of victuals, but was denied it, and the third day I offered eight Spanish milled dollars for a like favor, but was denied, and all that I could get out of the serjeant's mouth, was that, by God he would obey his orders. I now perceived myself to be again in substantial trouble. In this condition I formed an oblique acquaintance with a Capt. Travis, of Virginia; who was in the dungeon below me, through a little hole which was cut, with a pen-knife, through the floor of my apartment which communicated with the dungeon; it was a small crevice, through which I could discern but a very small part of his face at once, when he applied it to the hole; but from the discovery of him in the situation which we were both then in, I could not have known him, which I found to be true by an after acquaintance. I could nevertheless hold a conversation with him, and soon perceived him to be a gentleman of high spirits, who had a high sense of honor, and felt as big, as though he had been in a palace, and had treasures of wrath in store against the British. In fine I was charmed with the spirit of the man; he had been near or quite four months in that dungeon, with murderers, thieves, and every species of criminals, and all for the sole crime of unshaken fidelity to his country; but his spirits were above dejection, and his mind unconquerable. I engaged to do him every service in my power, and, in a few weeks afterwards, with the united petitions of the officers in the provost, procured his dismissal from the dark mansion of fiends to the apartments of his petitioners.

And it came to pass on the 3d day, at the going down of the sun, that I was presented with a piece of boiled pork, and some biscuit, which the sergeant gave me to understand, was my allowance, and I fed sweetly on the same; but I indulged my appetite by degrees, and, in a few days more, was taken from that apartment, and conducted to the next loft or story, where there were above twenty continental, and some militia officers, who had been taken, and imprisoned there, besides some private gentlemen, who had been dragged from their own homes to that filthy place, by tories. Several of every denomination mentioned died there, some before, and others after I was put there.

The history of the proceedings relative to the provost only, were I particular, would swell a volume larger than this whole narrative : I shall therefore only notice such of the occurrences which are most extraordinary.

Capt. Vandyke bore, with an uncommon fortitude, near twenty months' confinement in this place, and in the mean time was very serviceable to others who were confined with him. The allegation against him, as the cause of his confinement, was very extraordinary : He was accused of setting fire to the city of New-York, at the time the west part of it was consumed, when it was a known fact, that he had been in the provost a week before the fire broke out ; and, in like manner, frivolous were the ostensible accusations against most of those who were there confined ; the case of two militia officers excepted, who were taken in their attempting to escape from their parole ; and probably there may be some other instances which might justify such a confinement.

Mr. William Miller, a committee man, from West Chester county, and state of New-York, was taken from his bed in the dead of night, by his tory neighbours, and was starved for three days and nights in an apartment of the same gaol; add to this the denial of fire, and that in a cold season of the year, in which time he walked day and night, to defend himself against the frost, and when he complained of such a reprehensible conduct, the word rebel or committee man was deemed by the enemy a sufficient atonement for any inhumanity that they could invent or inflict. He was a man of good natural understanding, a close and sincere friend to the liberties of America, and endured fourteen months' cruel imprisonment with that magnanimity of soul, which reflects honor on himself and country.

Major Levi Wells, and Capt. Ozias Bissel, were apprehended and taken under guard from their parole on Long-Island, to the provost, on as fallacious pretences as the former, and were there continued till their exchange took place, which was near five months. Their fidelity and zealous attachment to their country's cause, which was more than commonly conspicuous was, undoubtedly the real cause of their confinement.

Major Brinton Payne, Capt. Flahaven, and Capt. Randolph, who had at different times distinguished themselves by their bravery, especially at the several actions, in which they were taken, were all the provocation they gave, for which they suffered about a year's confinement, each in the same filthy gaol.*

A few weeks after my confinement, on the like fallacious and wicked pretences, was brought to the same place, from his parole on Long-Island, Major Otho Holland Williams now a full Col. in the continental army. In his character are united the gentleman, officer, soldier, and friend ; he walked through the prison with an air of great disdain ; said he, " Is this the treatment which gentlemen of the continental army are to expect from the rascally British, when in their power? Heavens forbid it!" He was continued there about five months, and then exchanged for a British Major.

John Fell, Esq. now a member of Congress for the state of New-Jersey, was taken from his ownhouse by a gang of infamous Tories, and by order of a British Gen. was sent to the provost, where he was continued near one year. The stench of the gaol, which was very loathsome and unhealthy, occasioned a hoarseness of the lungs, which proved fatal to many who were there confined, and reduced this gentleman near to the point of death; he was indeed given over by his friends who were about him, and himself concluded he must die. I could not endure the thought that so worthy a friend to America should have his life stolen from him in such a mean, base, and scandalous manner, and that his family and friends should be bereaved of so great and desirable a blessing, as his farther care, usefulness and example, might prove to them. I therefore wrote a letter to

Gen. Robertson, who commanded in town, and being touched with the most sensible feelings of humanity, which dictated my pen to paint dying distress in such lively colours that it wrought conviction even on the obduracy of a British General, and produced his order to remove the now honorable John Fell, esq. out of a gaol, to private lodgings in town; in consequence of which he slowly recovered his health. There is so extraordinary a circumstance which intervened concerning this letter, that it is worth noticing.

Previous to sending it, I exhibited the same to the gentleman on whose behalf it was written, for his approbation, and he forbid me to send it in the most positive and explicit terms; his reason was, "That the enemy knew, by every morning's report, the condition of all the prisoners, mine in particular, as I have been gradually coming to my end for a considerable time, and they very well knew it, and likewise determined it should be accomplished, as they had served many others; that, to ask a favor, would give the merciless enemy occasion to triumph over me in my last moments, and therefore I will ask no favors from them, but resign myself to my supposed fate." But the letter I sent without his knowledge, and I confess I had but little expectations from it, yet could not be easy till I had sent it. It may be worth a remark, that this gentleman was an Englishman born, and, from the beginning of the revolution, has invariably asserted, and maintained the cause of liberty.

The British have made so extensive an improvement of the provost during the present revolution till of late, that a very short definition will be sufficient for the dullest apprehensions. It may be with propriety called the British inquisition, and calculated to support their oppressive measures and designs, by suppressing the spirit of liberty; as also a place to confine the criminals, and most infamous wretches of their own army, where many gentlemen of the American army, and citizens thereof, were promiscuously confined, with every species of criminals; but they divided into different apartments, and kept at as great a remove as circumstances permitted ; but it was nevertheless at the option of a villanous serjeant, who had the charge of the provost, to take any gentleman from their room, and put them into the dungeon, which was often the case : At two different times I was taken down stairs for that purpose, by a file of soldiers with fixed bayonets, and the serjeant brandishing his sword at the same time, and having been brought to the door of the dungeon, I there flattered the vanity of the serjeant, whose name was Keef, by which means I procured the surprizing favor to return to my companions ; but some of the high mettled young gentlemen could not bear his insolence, and determined to keep at a distance, and neither please or displease the villain, but none could keep clear of his abuse ; however, mild measures were the best ; he did not hesitate to call us damned rebels, and use us with the coarsest language. The Capts. Flahaven, Randolph and Mercer, were the objects of his most flagrant and repeated abuses, who were many times taken to the dungeon, and there continued at his pleasure. Capt. Flahaven took cold in the dungeon, and was in a declining state of health, but an exchange delivered him, and in all probability saved his life. It was very mortifying to bear with the insolence of such a vicious and ill bred, imperious rascal. Remonstrances against him were preferred to the commander of the town, but no relief could be obtained, for his superiors were undoubtedly well pleased with his abusive conduct to the gentlemen, under the severities of his power ; and remonstrating against his infernal conduct, only served to confirm him in authority ; and for this reason I never made any remonstrances on the subject, but only stroaked him, for I knew that he was but a cat's paw in the hands of the British officers, and that, if he should use us well, he would immediately be put out of that trust, and a worse man appointed to succeed him ; but there was no need of making any new appointment ; for Cunningham, their provost marshal, and Keef, his deputy, were as great rascals as their army could boast of, except one Joshua Loring, an infamous tory, who was Commissary of prisoners ; nor can any of these be supposed to be equally criminal with Gen. Sir William Howe and his associates, who prescribed and directed the murders and cruelties, which were by them perpetrated. This Loring is a monster!—There is not his like in human shape. He exhibits a smiling countenance, seems to wear a phiz of humanity, but has been instrumentally capable of the most consummate acts of wickedness, which were first projected by an abandoned British council, clothed with the authority of a Howe, murdering premeditatedly, in cold blood, near or quite two thousand helpless prisoners, and that in the most clandestine, mean and shameful manner, at New-York. He is the most mean spirited, cowardly, deceitful, and destructive animal in God's creation below, and legions of infernal devils, with all their tremendous horrors, are impatiently ready to receive Howe and him, with all their detestable accomplices, into the most exquisite agonies of the hottest region of hell fire.*

* The publishers would suppress some of the language and expressions Col. Allen occasionally makes use of;

The 6th day of July, 1777, Gen. St. Clair, and the army under his command, evacuated Ticonderoga, and retreated with the main body through Hubbardton into Castleton, which was but six miles distance, when his rear-guard, commanded by Col. Seth Warner, was attacked at Hubbardton by a body of the enemy of about two thousand, commanded by General Fraser. Warner's command consisted of his own and two other regiments, viz. Francis's and Hale's, and some scattering and enfeebled soldiers. His whole number, according to information, was near or quite one thousand; part of which were Green Mountain Boys; about seven hundred out of the whole he brought into action. The enemy advanced boldly, and the two bodies formed within about sixty yards of each other. Col. Warner having formed his own regiment, and that of Col. Francis's, did not wait for the enemy, but gave them a heavy fire from his whole line, and they returned it with great bravery. It was by this time dangerous for those of both parties, who were not prepared for the world to come ; but Colonel Hale being apprised of the danger, never brought his regiment to the charge, but left Warner and Francis to stand the blowing of it, and fled, but luckily fell in with an inconsiderable number of the enemy, and to his eternal shame, surrendered himself a prisoner.*

The conflict was very bloody. Col. Francis fell in the same, but Col. Warner, and the officers under his command, as also the soldiery, behaved with great resolution. The enemy broke, and gave way on the right and left, but formed again, and renewed the attack ; in the mean time the British grenadiers, in the centre of the enemy's line, maintained the ground, and finally carried it with the point of the bayonet, and Warner retreated with reluctance. Our loss was about thirty men killed, and that of the enemy amounting to three hundred killed, including a Major Grant. The enemy's loss I learnt from the confession of their own officers, when a prisoner with them. I heard them likewise complain, that the Green Mountain Boys took sight. The next movement of the enemy, of any material consequence, was their investing Bennington,* with a design to demolish it, and subject its Mountaineers, to which they had a great aversion, with one hundred and fifty chosen men, including tories, with the highest expectation of success, and having chosen an eminence of strong ground, fortifi-

* The Americans had collected a quantity of stores at Bennington; to destroy which as well as to animate the royalists and intimidate the patriots, general Burgoyne detached colonel Baum, with five hundred men and one hundred Indians. Colonel Breyman was sent to reinforce him, but did not arrive in time. On the 16th of August, general Stark, with about eight hundred brave militia men, attacked colonel Baum, in his entrenched camp about six miles from Bennington, and killed or took prisoners nearly the whole detachment. The next day colonel Breyman was attacked and defeated. In these actions, the Americans took about seven hundred prisoners and these successes served to revive the spirits of the people. This success however was in part counterbalanced by the advantages gained on the Mohawk by colonel St. Leger; but this officer, attacking fort Stanwix, was repelled, and obliged to abandon the attempt.

ed it with slight breast works, and two pieces of cannon ; but the government of the young state of Vermont, being previously jealous of such an attempt of the enemy, and in due time had procured a number of brave militia from the government of the state of New-Hampshire, who, together with the militia of the north part of Berkshire county, and state of Massachusetts, and the Green Mountain Boys, constituted a body of desperadoes,* under the command of the intrepid Gen. Stark, who in number were about equal to the enemy. Col. Herrick, who commanded the Green Mountain Rangers, and who was second in command, being thoroughly acquainted with the ground where the enemy had fortified, proposed to attack them in their works upon all parts, at the same time. This plan being adopted by the General and his council of war, the little militia brigade of undisciplined heroes, with their long brown firelocks, the best security of a free people, without either cannon or bayonets, was, on the 16th day of August, led on to the attack by their bold commanders, in the face of the enemy's dreadful fire, and to the astonishment of the world, and burlesque of discipline, carried every part of their lines in less than one quarter of an hour after the attack became general, took their cannon, killed and captivated more than two thirds of their number, which immortalized Gen. Stark, and made Bennington famous to posterity.

Among the enemy's slain was found Col. Baum, their commander, a Col. Pfester, who headed an infamous gang of tories, and a large part of his command; and among the prisoners was Major Meibome, their second in command, a number of British and Hessian officers, surgeons, &c. and more than one hundred of the aforementioned Pfester's command. The prisoners being collected together, were sent to the meeting house in the town, by a strong guard, and General Stark not imagining any present danger, the militia scattered from him to rest and refresh themselves; in this situation he was on a sudden attacked by a reinforcement of one thousand and one hundred of the enemy, commanded by a Gov. Skene, with two field pieces : They advanced in regular order, and kept up an incessant fire, especially from their field pieces, and the remaining militia retreating slowly before them, disputed the ground inch by inch. The enemy were heard to halloo to them, saying, stop Yankees. In the mean time, Col. Warner, with about one hundred and thirty men of his regiment, who were not in the first action, arrived and attacked the enemy with great fury, being determined to have ample revenge on account of the quarrel at Hubbardton, which brought them to a stand, and soon after Gen. Stark and Col. Herrick, brought on more of the scattered militia, and the action became general ; in a few minutes the enemy were forced from their cannon, gave way on all parts and fled, and the shouts of victory were a second time proclaimed in favor of the militia. The enemy's loss in killed and prisoners, in these two actions, amounted to more than one thousand and two hundred men, and our loss did not exceed fifty men. This was a bitter stroke to the enemy, but their pride would not permit them to hesitate but that they could vanquish the country, and as a specimen of their arrogancy, I shall insert General Burgoyne's proclamation.

“ By John Burgoyne, Esq. Lieutenant-General of his Majesty's armies in America, Colonel of the Queen's regiment of light dragoons, Governor of fort William in North-Britain, one of the Representatives of the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament, and commanding an army and fleet employed on an expedition from Canada, &c. &c. &c.

“ The forces entrusted to my command are designed to act in concert and upon a common principle, with the numerous armies and fleets which already display in every quarter of America, the power, the justice, and, when properly sought, the mercy of the King.

“ The cause, in which the British arms are thus exerted, applies to the most affecting interests of the human heart ; and the military servants of the crown, at first called forth for the sole purpose of restoring the rights of the constitution, now combine with love of their country, and duty to their sovereign, the other extensive incitements which spring from a due sense of the general privileges of mankind. To the eyes and ears of the temperate part of the public, and to the breasts of suffering thousands in the provinces, be the melancholy appeal, whether the present unnatural rebellion has not been made a foundation for the completest system of tyranny that ever God, in his displeasure, suffered for a time to be exercised over a froward and stubborn generation.

“ Arbitrary imprisonment, confiscation of property, persecution and torture, unprecedented in the inquisitions of the Romish church, are among the palpable enormities that verify the affirmative. These are inflicted by assemblies and committes, who dare to profess themselves friends to liberty, upon the most quiet subjects, without distinction of age or sex, for the sole crime, often for the sole suspicion, of having adhered in principle to the government under which they were born, and to which, by every tie, divine and human, they owe allegiance. To consummate these shocking proceedings, the profanation of religion is added to the most profligate prostitution of common reason; the consciences of men are set at nought; and multitudes are compelled not only to bear arms, but also to swear subjection to an usurpation they abhor.

“Animated by these considerations; at the head of troops in the full powers of health, discipline, and valor; determined to strike where necessary, and anxious to spare where possible, I by these presents invite and exhort all persons, in all places where the progress of this army may point; and by the blessing of God I will extend it far, to maintain such a conduct as may justify me in protecting their lands, habitations and families. The intention of this address is to hold forth security, not depredation to the country. To those whom spirit and principle may induce to partake of the glorious task of redeeming their countrymen from dungeons; and re-establishing the blessings of legal government, I offer encouragement and employment; and tions, I will find means to assist their undertakings. The domestic, the industrious, the infirm, and even the timid inhabitants, I am desirous to protect, provided they remain quietly at their houses ; that they do not suffer their cattle to be removed, nor their corn or forage to be secreted or destroyed ; that they do not break up their bridges or roads : nor by any other act, directly or indirectly, endeavour to obstruct the operations of the king's troops, or supply or assist those of the enemy.—Every species of provision brought to my camp, will be paid for at an equitable rate, and in solid coin.

“ In consciousness of christianity, my royal master's clemency, and the honor of soldier-ship, I have dwelt upon this invitation, and wished for more persuasive terms to give it impression : And let not people be led to disregard it, by considering their distance from the immediate situation of my camp.— I have but to give stretch to the Indian forces under my direction, and they amount to thousands, to overtake the hardened enemies of Great-Britain and America : I consider them the same wherever they may lurk.

“ If, notwithstanding these endeavours, and sincere inclinations to effect them, the phrensy of hostility should remain, I trust I shall stand acquitted in the eyes of God and men, in denouncing and executing the vengeance of the state against the wilful outcasts.—The messengers of justice and of wrath await them in the field; and devastation, famine, and every concomitant horror that a reluctant but indispensable prosecution of military duty must occasion, will bear the way to their return.”

J. BURGOYNE.

“ By order of his excellency the Lieut. General,

ROBT. KINGSTON,
Secretary.

“ Camp near Ticonderoga, 4th July, 1777.

Gen. Burgoyne was still the toast, and the severities towards the prisoners were in great measure increased or diminished, in proportion to the expectation of conquest. His very ostentatious Proclamation was in the hand and mouth of most of the soldiery, especially the tories, and from it, their faith was raised to assurance.—I wish my countrymen in general could but have an idea of the assuming tyranny, and haughty, malevolent, and insolent behavior of the enemy at that time; and from thence discern the intolerable calamities which this country have extricated themselves from by their public spiritedness and bravery.—The downfall of Gen. Burgoyne;* and surrender of his whole army, dashed the aspiring hopes and expectations of the enemy, and brought low the imperious spirit of an opulent, puissant and haughty nation, and made the tories bite the ground with anguish, exalting the valor of the free-born sons

* General Burgoyne, after collecting his forces and stores, crossed the Hudson with a view to penetrate to Albany. But the American army being reinforced daily, held him in check at Saratoga. General Gates now took the command, and was aided by the generals Lincoln and Arnold. On the 19th of September, the Americans attacked the British army, and with such bravery, that the enemy could boast of no advantage, and night put an end to the action. The loss of the enemy was about five hundred. General Burgoyne was confined in a narrow pass—having the Hudson on one side and impassable woods on the other—a body of Americans was in his rear—his boats he had ordered to be burnt, and he could not retreat—while an army of thirteen thousand men opposed him in front. On the 7th of October, the armies came to a second action, in which the British lost general Frazer, with a great number of officers and men, and were driven within their lines. On the part of the Americans the loss was not great, but generals Lincoln and Arnold were wounded.

Gates with laurels of eternal duration.—No sooner had the knowledge of this interesting and mighty event reached His Most Christian Majesty,* who in Europe shines with a superior lustre in goodness, policy and arms, but the illustrious potentate, auspiciously influenced by Heaven to promote the reciprocal interest and happiness of the ancient kingdom of France, and the new and rising states of America, passed the great and decisive decree, that the United States of America, should be free and independent.—Vaunt no more, Old England! consider you are but an island! and that your power has been continued longer than the exercise of your humanity. Order your broken and vanquished battalions to retire from America, the scene of your cruelties. Go home and repent in dust and sackcloth for your aggravated crimes. The cries of bereaved parents, widows, and orphans, reach the Heavens, and you are abominated by every friend to America. Take your friends the tories with you, and be gone, and drink deep of the cup of humiliation. Make peace with the princes of the house of Bourbon,* for you are in no condition to wage war with them. Your veteran soldiers are fallen in America, and your glory is departed. Be quiet and pay your debts, especially for the hire of the Hessians. There is no other way for you to get into credit again, but by reformation and plain honesty, which you have despised; for your power is by no means sufficient to support your vanity. I have had opportunity to see a great deal of it, and felt its severe effects, and learned lessons of wisdom and policy, when I wore your heavy irons, and bore your bitter revilings and reproach-

* The author, when writing the above, would scarcely have credited the tale, had he been told it, that England would be a flourishing and powerful nation after the house of Bourbon should be humbled in the dust. But such appears to be the fact; and the new dynasty of Bonaparte, after destroying every vestige of the rightful claimants to the throne is embracing in the extending circle of its supremacy, every power in Europe, it is feared, except England.

es. I have something of a smattering of philosophy, and understand human nature in all its stages tolerably well ; am thoroughly acquainted with your national crimes, and assure you that they not only cry aloud for Heaven's vengeance, but excite mankind to rise up against you. Virtue, wisdom and policy are, in a national sense, always connected with power, or in other words, power is their offspring, and such power as is not directed by virtue, wisdom and policy, never fails finally to destroy itself as yours has done.— It is so in the nature of things, and unfit that it should be otherwise ; for if it was not so, vanity, injustice, and oppression, might reign triumphant forever. I know you have individuals, who still retain their virtue, and consequently their honor and humanity. Those I really pity, as they must more or less suffer in the calamity, in which the nation is plunged headlong ; but as a nation I hate and despise you.

My affections are Frenchified.—I glory in Louis the sixteenth, the generous and powerful ally of these states ; am fond of a connection with so enterprizing, learned, polite, courteous, and commercial a nation, and am sure that I express the sentiments and feelings of all the friends to the present revolution. I begin to learn the French tongue, and recommend it to my countrymen before Hebrew, Greek or Latin, (provided but one of them only are to be attended to) for the trade and commerce of these states in future must inevitably shift its channel from England to France, Spain, and Portugal; and therefore the statesman, politician and merchant, need be acquainted with their several languages, particularly the French, which is much in vogue in most parts of Europe. Nothing could have served so effectually to illuminate, polish, and enrich these states as the present revolution, as well as preserve their liberty. Mankind are naturally too national, even to a degree of bigotry, and commercial intercourse with foreign nations, has a great and necessary tendency to improve mankind, and erase the superstition of the mind by acquainting them that human nature, policy and interest, are the same in all nations, and at the same time they are bartering commodities for the conveniences and happiness of each nation, they may reciprocally exchange such part of their customs and manners as may be beneficial, and learn to extend charity and good will to the whole world of mankind.—I was confined in the provost-gaol at New-York the 26th day of August, and continued there to the third day of May, 1778, when I was taken out under guard, and conducted to a sloop in the harbour at New-York, in which I was guarded to Staten-Island, to Gen. Campbell's quarters, where I was admitted to eat and drink with the Gen. and several other of the British field officers, and treated for two days in a polite manner. As I was drinking wine with them one evening, I made an observation on my transition from the provost-criminals to the company of gentlemen, adding that I was the same man still, and should give the British credit by him (speaking to the Gen.) for two days good usage.

The next day Col. Archibald Campbell, who was exchanged for me, came to this place, conducted by Mr. Boudinot, the then American commissary of prisoners, and saluted me in a handsome manner, saying that he never was more glad to see any gentleman in his life, and I gave him to understand that I was equally glad to see him, and was apprehensive that it was from the same motive. The gentlemen present laughed at the fancy, and conjectured that sweet liberty was the foundation of our gladness ; so we took a glass of wine together, and then I was accompanied by gen. Campbell, col. Campbell Mr. Boudinot, and a number of British officers, to the boat, which was ready to sail to Elizabeth-town-point. Mean while I entertained them with a rehearsal of the cruelties exercised towards our prisoners ; and assured them that I should use my influence, that their prisoners should be treated in future in the same manner, as they should in future treat ours ; that I thought it was right in such extreme cases, that their example should be applied to their own prisoners ; then exchanged the decent ceremonies of compliment, and parted. I sailed to the point aforesaid, and, in a transport of joy, landed on liberty ground,* and, as I advanced into the country, received the acclamations of a grateful people.

I soon fell into company with Col. Sheldon, of the light horse, who in a polite and obliging manner accompanied me to head-quarters, Valley Forge, where I was courteously received by Gen. Washington, with peculiar marks of his approbation and esteem, and was introduced to most of the generals, and many of the principal officers of the army, who treated me with respect, and after having offered Gen. Washington my farther service, in behalf of my country, as soon as my

of them. Hunger, though an unpleasant sensation, gives us a most excellent relish for a well furnished repast; and the bird, who has recently escaped the confinement of the fowler, cleaves the æther with lighter pinions than his fellow, who has long hopped, languidly, from spray to spray, unconscious of the pains of captivity. After such a recital of woes as the reader has witnessed, he will think that the feelings of Col. Allen on his arrival, must have nearly repaid him for the cruelty of his sufferings, and the length of his confinement.

“ Swift as I move, where earth's blest blessings dwell,
 What glad presentiments my bosom swell!
 What recollections! Memory's power restores,
 Home of my childhood, thy beloved shores!
 Fair, bursting through oblivion's mist, appear Thy deep-green vales, bold hills, and fountains clear.”

health, which was very much impaired, would admit, and obtain his licence to return home, I took my leave of his excellency, and set out from Valley Forge with Gen. Gates and his suit for Fish Kill, where we arrived the latter end of May. In this tour the Gen. was pleased to treat me with the familiarity of a companion, and generosity of a lord, and to him I made known some striking circumstances which occurred in the course of my captivity.—I then bid farewell to my noble Gen. and the gentlemen of his retinue, and set out for Bennington, the capital of the Green Mountain Boys, where I arrived the evening of the last day of May to their great surprise ; for I was to them as one rose from the dead, and now both their joy and mine was complete. Three cannon were fired that evening, and next morning Col. Herrick gave orders, and fourteen more were discharged, welcoming me to Bennington, my usual place of abode ; thirteen for the United States, and one for young Vermont.

After this ceremony was ended we moved the flowing bowl, and rural felicity, sweetened with friendship, glowed in each countenance, and with loyal healths to the rising States of America, concluded that evening, and, with the same loyal spirit,

Of the following list of subscribers the titles are omitted. We intended publishing a complete catalogue of the names of those who have subscribed for the work. But as many of the papers were not returned in season, it was found to be impossible without a delay of its publication.
